It is not yet in your power to prefent to us the detail of a journey much more interefting and ufeful than mine. You have feen wrefted from you in a moment the fruit of four years exertions. Expofed to the poniards of the priefts of Rome, you were unable, when you fled their malice, to fave the moft precious part of yourfelf.

In the mean time, deign to receive the public homage I offer you. In accompanying me over the barren and burning fands of Africa,

INTRODUCTION.

THE reader will recollect that I did not return to the Cape till after a fix months journey through the interior parts of the fouthern extremity of Africa.

During my abfence, the Cape had experienced many revolutions. On my arrival from Europe, I found there the French regiment of Pondicherry; and, on my return from this firf journey, the garrifon was reinforced with the Swifs regiment of Meuron and the legion de Luxembourg. I had been acquainted, in France, with feveral officers of the latter corps; and I felt, on feeing them again, all thofe tender fenfa-tions which remind us of our country whereever we obferve its manners, its character, and its language.

The females of the Cape, when I faw them for the firft time, had really excited my aftonifhment by their drefs and their elegance; but I admired in them, above all, that modefty and referve peculiar to the Dutch manners, which nothing as yet had corrupted.

In the courfe of fix months, a great change had taken place. It was no longer the French modes that they copied; it was a caricature of the French. Plumes, feathers, ribbons, and tawdry ornaments heaped together without tafte on every head, gave to the prettieft figures a grotefque air, which often provoked a fmile when they appeared. This mania had extended to the neighbouring plantations, where the women could fcarcely fearcely be known. A mode of drefs entirely new was every where introduced; but fo fantaftical, that it would have been difficult to determine from what country it had been imported.

In the courfe of my journey, I had collected a large quantity of oftrich-feathers, which I intended to tranfmit to Europe. When the ladies got notice of this treafure, it was impoffible for me to convey them to the place of their deftination. They flocked around me from all quarters to beg a few of them. People even whom I did not know prefented themfelves in the name of this or the other lady, and modefly requefted the ufe of a dozen feathers for the evening. I difpofed, therefore, of all my plumes as fpeedily as poffible, that I might the fooner fhut up fhop. Such was the folly of the day; and this mode of infinuating one's-felf into the good graces of the fair fex was fo efficacious, that many officers fent to France for a cargo of feathers to gratify their paffion. The hufbands, on their fide, vying in gallantry with the lovers, procured fome from Afia, and even from Holland. Africá could no longer fupply a fufficient number; and they were become dearer there even than in Europe.

The French enjoy one advantage in particular above every other nation. Whereever their deftiny may lead them, they foon acquire a fort of empire over every thing that furrounds them. Their vivacity, foftnefs of manner, and attention to the graces, have fomething in them fo captivating, and even their prefumption and forwardnefs fo forcibly Arike the generality of minds, and efpecially the minds of women, that, in a little time, perfectly overcome and fubdued, it is confidered as a fort of duty and honour to adopt their manners and language. Though the town was occupied only with warlike preparations, and though an attack from the Englifh fleet was every moment expected, the French officers had already introduced a tafte for pleafure. Employed in the morning at their exercife, the French foldiers in the evening acted plays. A part of the barracks was transformed into a theatre; and as women capable of performing female characters could not be found in the town, they affigned thefe parts to fome of their comrades, whofe youth, delicate features, and frefhnefs of complexion, feemed beft calculated to favour the deception. Thefe heroines, of a new kind, heightened the curiofity of the fpectators, and rendered the entertainment fill more lively and interefting. With regard to the actors, fome of them had actually very confiderable talents for comedy; and I recollect that one of them acted the part of Figaro, in the Barber of Seville, in fo fuperior a ftyle, that, at the Cape, and in his corps, he was afterwards always called by the name of his character.

Thefe ingenious diverfions afforded me, I confefs, much amufement; but the idea that moft pleafed me was to fee them transferred to Africa; that is to fay, in the neighbourhood of lions, panthers, and hyænas. As for the Creoles, who had never witneffed before any thing of the kind, they were abfolutely inchanted. Nothing was talked of in every company throughout the town but the French plays. To add to the general pleafure, ladies of the firft rank confidered it as incumbent on them to lend to the military actors and actreffes, their laces, jewels, rich dreffes, and moft valuable ornaments. But fome of them had caufe to repent of their condefcenfion; for it happened more than once that the countefs of Almaviva having left in pledge at the futtling-houfe her borrowed decorations, the owner, to recover them, was obliged to difcharge not only the bill due for brandy and tobacco, but all the other debts of the heroine.

During the intoxication and giddinefs occafioned by thefe amufements, Love alfo did not fail to act his part; and certain little intrigues were, from time to time, brought to light, which gave employment to the tongue of fcandal, and introduced unhappinefs into families. Hymen, it is true, amidft thefe adventures, fometimes intervened to repair the follies of his brother; and many marriages, which reftored every thing to order, were the refult of his negotiations; but the complaints, though ftifled, did not lefs exift. The watchfulnefs of the mother was alert. The hufband, by fo much the more fecretly irritated as he faw himfelf obliged to conceal his jealoufy, curfed in his heart both actors and theatre ; while the matronly part of the community, lefs on the referve, declaimed with bitternefs againft the licentioufnefs that prevailed, which they wholly imputed to this mode of theatrical entertainment. At laft, to the great mortification of the young, but to the high fatisfaction of the old women and hurbands, the theatre was on a fudden fhut up. The caufe that effected this was altogether foreign to the complaints that were made, and of a nature that it was impoffible to forefee.

Though the Cape had not been attacked, it had experienced fome of the ufual fcourges of war. A dread of the Englifh fleet having prevented fpecie from being fent thither from Europe, cafh in a little time became fcarce; the price of provifions was increafed; and a general alarm prevailed through the colony. In this penury, the Dutch Eaft-India company thought proper to create a paper currency; but this fictitious money, which was fupported by no other credit than a confidence in the fignatures, in reality added one evil more to what already exifted. The greater part of the planters in the interior of the fettlement were obftinate in refufing it ; and many of them, apprehenfive of being paid with paper, would no longer bring provifions to the town. By this conduct the value of every thing was quadrupled; and in a little time extreme fcarcity was the confequence.

While matters were in this fituation, our actors, who in all probability were not too regularly paid, or who at leaft did not receive an income proportioned to their expences, found themfelves embarraffed. To extricate themfelves from their difficulties, two of them took it into their heads to imitate the paper money of the company, and to put their notes alfo in circulation. Unfortunately they were fo badly executed, and the fignatures in particular fo awkwardly copied, that they were foon detected. Juftice laid hold Vol. I.

of the affair ; the bufinefs affumed a ferion afpect ; and it was for fome time apprehended that our two heroes of the fock would have made a very tragical exit. Every thing, however, was at length arranged; and either from regard to the individuals and the corps to which they belonged, or gratitude for the pleafure they had afforded, it was thought fufficient to banifl them from the Cape, and to put them on board a veffel that was about to return to Europe. I was prefent when they departed. The theatrical company was thus rendered incomplete; and, afhamed of the adventure, they dared neither feek others to fupply the vacant places, nor refume their entertainments.

Intoxicating as were thefe pleafures, Government meanwhile had not been inattentive to the danger which threatened the colony. As they daily expected to be attacked by the Englifh fleet, they had increafed the means of defence, and ordered different works and new fortifications to be conftructed. But, though thefe plans had been begun before I left the Cape, they were not finifhed when I returned; and I every where found men at work, bufily employed in completing them.

At firf, the bufinefs had been carried on with activity and ardour; becaufe the inhabitants, inftigated by their private intereft, which was then confidered as involved with that of the public, had voluntarily offered their fervices, and mingled with the workmen. Young and old, foldiers and magiftrates, failors and planters, all folicited the honour of co-operating for the general good and common fafety. To behold this heterogeneous multitude-fome loaded with pick-axes, and fome with fpades, or other fimilar im-plements-marching out in the morning from the town, and proceeding in high fpirits to the new fortifications, was a fight truly admirable.

But this patriotic fervour was of no long continuance. Under pretence of fparing their ftrength, and that they might not weary themfelves to no purpofe, they foon caufed their תaves to follow them with the tools and inftruments. In a little time they contented themfelves with fending their flaves only; and at laft thefe fubftitutes themfelves, in imitation of their mafters, or perhaps by their fecret orders, gave over going alfo. Their enthufiafm, in fhort, from the firf moment of its breaking out till the period when it was thus entirely cooled, had been the affair of fomething lefs than a fortnight.

The works, however, though abandoned to mercenary hands, were not interrupted. Government caufed them to be continued with vigour ; and, when I returned from my journey, journey, the expence of them already amounted to a very confiderable fum. Nothing was to be feen but preparations for war and the means of defence. It appeared as if every inch of ground was meant to be difputed with the enemy; and if the company had reafon to complain of the enormous coft with which thefe preparations were attended, they at any rate proved, that thofe into whofe hands they had intrufted one of their moft important poffeffions neglected nothing which they thought calculated to preferve it.

From the Table Mountain to Falfe Bay the whole road was lined with fmall redoubts, which, being conftructed in fuch a manner as to fupport each other, feemed likely to check the enemy, or at leaft retard him in his march.

Another road which conducted from the town to Baie-aux-bois (woody bay) was forb 3 tified

tified in a different manner. Being both the moft beautiful, and at the fame time the moft pleafant of all the roads in the neighbourhood, it formed a delightful walk for the inhabitants; but from a dread that the Englifh, invited by the facility which it prefented of marching to the town, might refolve to make their defcent at this bay, the road had not only been broken up throughout its whole length, but, at certain diftances, deep trenches and excavations had been cut in it. Thefe works, which were nothing in reality but miferable deftruction, I could not behold without pain. The road had become my favou* rite walk; and I had in fome meafure appropriated it to myfelf. It was here I was fond of ftraying at thofe moments when it was deferted by others, to indulge at leifure in my reveries, and to regulate the plan of my journeys. I had counted every tree or fhrub that grew on its borders, and was acquainted with every fot where I could fit down ta enjoy my meditations. War and its preparations had rooted up the verdant turf, and the flowers which had added to its beauty were faded or elfe totally difappeared. The town had loft what to me was its greateft ornament, its moft bewitching charm.

In the neighbourhood, the whole fhore, from Pointe des Pendus (gallows-point), near the Lion's Rump, to the bottom of the Bay, was defended by new works of every kind. The batteries were every where increafed. Cannon, it is true, were wanting; but a fupply of thefe had been promifed from the Inle of France; and, if I remember right, after a peace was concluded, they actually arrived.

On the eaft the town itfelf was to be defended by a ftrong line of palifades, beginning at the fhore and ending at the bottom of the Devil Mountain. It was the Ifle of France again that was to furnifh the wood neceffary for this circumvallation ; and that engagement was, at any rate, much better fulfilled than the preceding one. But was it not a fhame for a Government, poffeffing immenfe forefts, to fend eight hundred leagues to folicit of a foreign power affiftance, which, without difficulty and almoft without expence, it might have obtained by fea as well as by land from different parts of its own territories at home? 1 have already publifhed fome reflections on this fubject in the account of my firt travels. On my return to Holland, I mentioned the circumftance to feveral of the directors of the company, and I have no doubt that fome plan will be adopted in confequence, which their own intereft at the fame time fo powerfully recommends*.

* The ftate of things fince thefe lines were written has greatly changed; it will, perhaps, change ftill more, and facilitate eftablifhments, which, by cuftom, felfifhnefs, and the intereft of partial affociations, have long been retarded.

As it was on the eaftern fide that the inhabitants expected the Englifh to make their attack, it was in this quarter they took care to conftruct the frongeft fortifications. But, among thefe new works, there was one which was far from meeting with general approbation. By profeffional men it was confidered, if not altogether ufelefs, as calculated at leaft very little to obftruct the taking of the town. To prove who were in the right, and who in the wrong, in the judgment of this matter, it would have been neceffary that the town fhould actually be befieged; but this was an event that did not take place. To the inhabitants, however, the conftruction of this fort afforded a fubject of confiderable pleafantry. According to them, the contraciors had laboured for their own advantage rather than for that of the colony; and by Colonel Gordon the fort was called in derifion Fort Guffet, zxx INTRODUCTION.
While the means of defence were thus increafed, Government endeavoured alfo to augment the number of troops. With this view, every perfon without diftinction that offered himfelf was enlifted: be his defects what they might, not an individual was refufed. I do not precifely know what fuch foldiers would have done in cafe of an attack; but I fufpect they would have oppofed no very for-- midable face to the enemy.

Jult the fame, in my opinion, would it have been with a regiment of Hottentots that was formed. Never did plan afford fo muck fcope for ridicule as this; and to be convinced how juft was the ridicule, a fight only of thefe grotefque troops at their exercife was fufficient. One day as I was croffing the parade where they were affembled, and where one of the company's fervants was teaching them what he called military evolutions, I enjoyed enjoyed this pleafure. I had never before laughed fo heartily, and have never thought of them fince without the fame convulfive merriment. Thofe who have feen at a fair, apes perform their exercife under the whip of a fhow-man, joffle one another by contrary motions, wheel to the right when they fhould turn to the left, and jump about or leap on each others backs when they ought to march or to halt, will have no imperfect image of the manœuvres of thefe demi-favages. As none of them knew how to diftinguifh his right hand from his left, the reader may judge how well they muft have obeyed the commands of their general. With a ftupid look, they kept their eyes ftedfaftly fixed upon him ; but fcarcely had he given the word when, agitated as if by convulfions, each performed a different evolution; and all that could be taught them was to remain in a line clofely fqueezed one againft the other, On the arrival of the firlt bullet, and even on the firf report of a cannon, the whole corps would have difperfed, like a flock of ftarlings, and never would it have been poffible to rally them.

There was one mode, however, in which perhaps they might have been rendered ufeful : to have pofted them in fome fecure place of ambufcade, where they could have nothing to apprehend, and there to have employed them in firing as occafion might offer. For it is fcarcely to be expected that the favage, a total franger to our prejudices, fhould fet much value on the honour to be acquired by remaining at one's poft, there to await perhaps certain death. The favage prefers lying in ambufh for his enemy under the cover of darknefs. The art of war is to him the art of avoiding danger. If he attack, it is only when he thinks himfelf fure of killing, without on his fide running any rik; and to afk him to expofe his life to procure victory to thofe in whofe fuccefs he has no intereft, would be propofing an action that he would confider in the light of infanity.

Of the merit and bravery of the different officers deftined to command the forts and the troops, I have nothing to fay. They were all, no doubt, men of courage and talents, all worthy of the pofts affigned, or the rank conferred upon them ; but I very much regretted that I did not fee among them the brave and intrepid Staaring. This feaman, fince fnatched by the hand of death from his family and country, had lately given an example of refolution that aftoniihed the whole colony ; and I publifh it here with the more pleafure, as I fhall thus, in part, difcharge what I owe to the memory of a man to whom I was exceedingly attached.

A fhip under Danifh colours had anchored in the Cape Bay; and there were reafons fons to fufpect that he was an Englifh $\mathrm{P} \boldsymbol{\mathrm { y }}$; or at leaft a tranfport laden with warlike fores for the enemy. Staaring, who was port-captain, thought it his duty, in that quality, to endeavour to obtain certain information on the fubject ; and with that view went on board his floop, and proceeded to the fhip to examine her. This was what the Dane had been afraid of. Scarcely was the captain in his power when he gave orders to weigh anchor, and made preparations for putting to fea. Staaring, however, fufpecting this treachery, had, before he quitted the more, taken precautions to prevent its fuccefs. Accordingly, he made from the deck the fignal that had been agreed upon; and the weft battery, which he had himfelf caufed to be conftructed, and which was called by his name, immediately opened and began to difcharge its guns upon the veffel. In vain did the Dane threaten in his wrath, that, unlefs Staaring gave a counter-fignal and filenced the battery,

INTRODUCTION. $\quad$ xxy

he would lafh him to the main-maft, and expofe him to deftruction from the fhot of thofe very cannon which were fired in obedience to his orders. This brave man was not to be intimidated; and inftead of bafely complying with the propofal, he repeated his fignal, which brought a fecond difcharge from the battery. When the crew faw this, they became almof frantic with rage, fell upon the object of their vengeance, beat him feverely, and actually tied him to the maft : but Staaring, though furrounded by danger, derided his tormentors. "You know not what you "do," faid he with a fmile. "Perceive you " not that thefe bullets are fent by my com" mand; that they know me; and will, there"fore, do me no harm ?"

What he thus faid in pleafantry, wonderful as it may appear, was eventually realifed. The fhot fell in fhowers on every fide, without one of them touching him : but the veffel was fo thattered, that the was foon obliged to put about and to anchor with difgrace un. der the battery that had fired upon her. In fhort, this expedition, the fuccefs of which was the effect almoft of a moment, proved fo much the more honourable to the hero who conducted it, as the veffel, in reality, was a fmuggler; and, being judged a legal prize, was fold, I believe, for the benefit of the company. For fome time nothing was talked of at the Cape but Staaring's intrepidity. But his private affairs requiring his prefence in Holland, he had recently departed with his wife; and, to avoid being attacked by the Englifh, took his paffage on board a Danih fhip that was bound to Copenhagen.

The adventure at the Cape had reached the court of Denmark; but the circumftances of the capture were not diftinctly known; and Staaring had to fear that, if the court fhould hear of his arrival, he might be arrefted, and perhaps put in irons till more certain information could be obtained. Some friends forewarned him of his danger. He thought it prudent, therefore, to withdraw; and departed privately from Copenhagen, leaving behind him his wife, who did not delay to follow him to Holland, where the had the misfortune foon after to lofe him. But he has left a fon who one day will doubtlefs fulfil the brilliant deftiny to which the name he inherits fo powerfully invites him.

The time I fpent at the Cape was not loft to my fudies and purfuits. I had not only been able, with a part of what I had brought with me from my journey, to form an interefting collection; but fcarcely a "day elapfed without my rambling into the country to procure other articles by which to enlarge it. Nothing came amifs to me: beetles, flies, butterflies, chryfalides, nefts, eggs, quadrupeds, and birds of all kinds, had their value; Vol. I.

and all ferved either to fill up a place in my cabinet, or as objects of ftudy. At the houfe of Boers too there was a kind of menagerie to which I frequently reforted, in order to make obfervations and fometimes experiments.

It was by means of this menagerie, added to what my two journeys had enabled me to obferve, that I fucceeded in obtaining a knowledge of the food, propenfities, habits, and duration of life, more or lefs protracted, of certain animals. Some of thefe obfervations, which are highly worthy the attention of naturalifts, I fhall publifh hereafter. At prefent, I mean to confine myfelf to a fingle experiment, which, not falling in with the thread of my narration, would be confidered as foreign to it, and confequently can here only be inferted with propriety.

I had often remarked that fpiders fpread

\text { INTRODUCTION. } \quad \text { xxxix }
$$ their webs in certain folitary and clofe places, to which it is very difficult for flies and even for gnats to penetrate ; and I concluded that, as thefe animals muft long remain without food, they were capable of enduring confiderable abftinence and hunger.

To be affured of this circumftance, I took a large garden fpider, which I inclofed under a glafs bell, well faftened round the bottom with cement, and in this fituation I left it for ten months together. Notwithftanding this deprivation of food, it appeared during the whole period equally vigorous and alert ; and I remarked no other alteration than that its belly, which at the time of its imprifonment was the fize of a nut, decreafed infenfibly till at laft it was fcarcely larger than the head of a pin.

I then put under the bell another fpider of the fame kind. At firf they kept at a diftance from each other, and remained motionc 2
lefs;
lefs; but prefently the meagre one, preffed by hunger, approached and attacked the flranger. It returned feveral times to the charge; and in thefe difierent conflicts its enemy being deprived of almolt all its claws, it carried them away, and retired to its former fituation to devour them. The meagre one itfelf had allo loft three of its claws, on which it equally fed; and I perceived that its plumpnefs was in fome meafure reftored by this repaft. At length, the newatomer, deprived of all its means of defence, fell the next day a facrifice. It was fpeedily devoured; and in lefs than twenty-four hours the old inhabitant of the bell became as round as it had been at the firt moment of its confinement.

Other animals can by no means endure the fame degree of hunger. An abitinence of a few days is fufficient to deftroy them; and the term will be horter or longer according to the nature of their food. Among birds, for example, the granivorous generally die in the fpace of from forty-eight to fixty hours, while the entomophagi, thofe who feed on infects, will hold out for a fhort period longer.

But thofe which can leaft bear abftinence are fuch as live on fruit; a property that is owing probably to their ftomach, which, digefting more fpeedily, has more frequent need of aliment. This quick digeftion, however, is attended with one advantage, which is, that, reduced to an equal degree of inanition by abfinence, the animal, if affifted, will recover and refume its frength fooner than others. With the granivorous fpecies this is not the cafe. Debilitated to a certain point, if nothing but the feeds on which they ufually feed be given them, they can never be reftored; their fomach having toft, in part, its power of digettion. The carnivorous, on the contrary, retain their di-
geftion to the laft moment ; and hence it happens that, receiving the kind of food which is fuited to them, an inftant only is neceffary to their recovery.

A little reflection will enable us clearly to perceive the caufe of this difference. Flẹh, from its affinity to the fubftance of the animal, becomes fpeedily incorporated with it; and, as its juices are highly nutritive, the affiftance it gives is almoft inftantaneous, With feeds the cafe is the reverfe: to be digefted, they mult remain fome time in the ftomach, where they require to be previoully foftened and triturated. This operation is tedious, and fuppofes, befides, a vital action in the gullet; a motion and force which fafting deftroys.

What I have advanced upon this fubject is not only fupported by plaufible reafons, but is the refult alfo of experiment.

I took two fparrows of the fame age, and in equally good condition, and reduced them, by the want of nourifhment, to fuch a fate of weaknefs that neither of them was able to take what was offered him. I then forced down the throat of one fome bruifed feeds, and of the other a little minced flefh. In a few minutes the latter was quite well; while the former, two hours after, died.

Confidering, however, granivorous birds with attention, it might be faid, that feed, though it forms the principal part of their food, is to thefe animals a food at the fame time that is infufficient and too little nutritive, fince they add thereto fruit, flefh, infects, and, in a word, whatever nutritive fubftance they meet with. The carnivorous, on the other hand, whether they live on flefh or on infects, are uniform in their food. One kind is fufficient for them ; and they have no recourfe to feeds.

Of all the feathered race, the fpecies moft fubject to hunger and to the frequent want of food have appeared to me to be the pifcivorous, or fuch as feed on filh. Nature has accordingly given them large gullets or pouches, in which they accumulate, for future want, a larger ftore of provifion.

With regard to birds of prey, they can endure hunger for a very confiderable period. I have made on this fubject various experiments, but fhall content myfelf with relating a fingle fact, which is truly aftonifhing, and feems to prove fomething more than the mere capacity of enduring abftinence.

I had a vulture of the fpecies called at the Cape chafe-fiente * (dung-hunter) which I wanted to kill, in order to ftuff it. The animal appearing too fat for the purpofe, I obliged it to faft. Upon vifiting it, I every day expected to find it dead, or reduced at leaft to extreme weaknefs; but it always appeared in the fame fate of health and vigour. At length, after eleven days of entire faft, feeing it ftill alive, my patieace was exhaufted; and, as I had other cares to engage my attention, I put an end to its exiftence. In preparing it for prefervation, I perceived that it could have lived a much longer time; for, notwithftanding its abftinence, it ftill fo abounded with fat, that I was obliged to extract it before I could fucceed in my operation.

The fame obfervation is applicable to quadrupeds. Such as live on flefh will endure hunger much longer than others; a fact fo well known and attefted, that I may fare myfelf the trouble of proving it.

xlvi INTRODUCTION.

The human fpecies alfo furnifhes a very ftriking inflance of the fame truth in thofe nations which more or lefs feed upon flefh. The Hottentot whofe nourifhment is milk and roots, or dried locufts, can by no means endure the fatigue and hunger which other Hottentots can who live by the chace, and who, often obliged to pafs feveral days without eating, will fuffer no inconvenience from the circumftance. I have even remarked that this kind of aliment, whatever prejudices may exift to the contrary, every thing elfe being equal, contributes to render the individual fronger than any other. Of all the races of men with which I have been acquainted, the largeft and moft robuft, in my opinion, are the planters at the Cape; and I know of none that are fo addicted to animal food. I myfelf, who, by the nature of my journeys, was obliged for feveral years to live folely on flefh, muft acknowledge that I never enjoyed a more uniform or better ftate of health than at that period. I alfo never fo much abftained from ftrong liquors; whereas, if the Englifh, who eat more animal food than the other nations of Europe, can make upon it two meals a day, it is becaufe they drink in the interval, tea, punch, and other beverages of the fame tendency, which accelerate its digeition.

Befides the experiments I profecuted as to the power, more or lefs extenfive, that certain animals have of fubfifting without food, I engaged in others as to the impaffibility, fo to exprefs myfelf, of certain kinds of infects, an impaffibility by means of which beings, the term of whofe exiftence is fix months, or even lefs, appear to have received from nature the gift of being indeftructible through the medium of thofe fenfations commonly called painful, which are ordinarily deftructive of every thing that has life.

I took a large red-winged locuft of the Cape, opened its belly, and, pulling out its intertines, filled the cavity with cotton; and in that ftate I fixed it to the botton of a box with a pin, which paffed through its thorax. It remained there for five months; and at the end of this period it ftill moved both its legs and its antennz.

I transfixed other locufts in the fame manner, without, however, opening their bellies as in the former cafe; and, to try if I could ftifle them, I put into the box in which they were enclofed camphor and firit of turpen. tine, and they lived there notwithftanding feveral days.
" If you tear a leg from a fly," fays the philofophical author of Etudes de la Nature, "it " moves about as if it had fuftained no lofs. "When deprived of fo confiderable a mem"ber, it neither faints nor is convulfed; " emits

I have fometimes attempted to drown in fpirit of wine certain kinds of infects. The moft robuf carnivorous kind would have been ftifled by it in lefs than two minutes; whereas thefe infects were often alive after an immerfion of twenty-four hours. It is well known that Dr. Franklin recovered fles which he found in fome bottles of wine that had been fent to him from Madeira, and which he had kept in his cellar for upwards of fix months.

1. INTRODUCTION.

Thefe experiments, which were a fource of confiderable amufement, occupied my hours of leifure, filled up the interval between my two journeys, and ferved to moderate my impatience. But at length the defire of again contemplating nature recurred with fo much force, that a refidence at the Cape became infupportable, and I began to think ferioully of my departure.

> COUNTRY OF THE GREATER AND LESS NIMIQUAS.

ISit down at laft to difcharge my debt. Different as are the circumftances under which I refume my pen, the impulfe to write is become the more powerful. The benefit of my long and wearifome travels fhall not be loft. If the firft fruits have been devoured by mercilefs oppreffors, the misfortune is amply repaid by the fectacle of public liberty. A fufficiently fine harveft ftill remains to make me anxious of offering it to my country; and this portion, at Vol. I. B leaft, leaft, of the only prefents I am able to beftow, will neither be debafed by tares nor weeds. In the fituation in which I live, I find the image of my early independence. I have no obftacles to overcome, and no corrupt beings to deal with, that I may pay to nature the tribute of adoration, which fhe has a right to expect, from the moft faithful of her lovers. I reenter the defarts of Africa once more to vifit her. I fhall paint her as fhe is. She cannot but be pleafed at feeing me, when fhe learns the efforts that, in this happy portion of the earth, have been made to revive her worfhip, and rebuild her altars. I will fhow her her portraits. She will not defpife the drefs in which they will be feen. Can fhe be offended if, at fo great a diftance from the country where the firft appeared to me without either paint or attire, a flight veil be thrown over her charms? or rather has fhe not herfelf fixed the limits where change of temperature, and greater wants imperioufly demand a modification of her effence? Let it then excite no aftonifhment if, in the relation of my; adventures, and defirous of preferving my fincerity, a figh efcape me at the fight of her firft image. She had my whole affections; I owe to her an account of all the fecrets of my heart ; and this predilection, which I cannot forego for the remote affylum in which I am deftined to take up my refidence by her fide, is an additional homage that I render to the people fill worthy of practifing her leffons.

Land of repofe, of ignorance, and of felicity; land that without toil haft fo long nourifhed me; ye filent rocks, where I depofited all re. membrance, and all regret of the patt ; ye inchanting folitudes, troubled by no figh, and foiled by no tyranny ; fhould fome Frenchman chance to wander upon your borders, open to him your delightful retreats, and render ftill more auguft the ineftimable bleffing which his exertions have obtained for him!

I was fcarcely returned to the Cape of GoodHope when my thoughts already turned upon another excurfion. Sixteen months incelfantly occupied in travelling and hunting, had neither cooled my zeal, nor accomplifhed my wifhes. The paffion of increafing my knowledge in natural hiflory became every day more imperious, and feemed to acquire flrength from the multitude of objects I had collected. My fatigues were no fooner at an end, than the remembrance of them ended allo. Finding my-

[^0]felf in the midft of a town, and about to engage in the goffip of a fociety, for which I was by no means formed, I could not help cafting behind me a longing look. I plunged in idea into thofe romantic retreats, thofe majeftic forefts, of which I had taken poffeffion without difficulty, and could leave without protectors. This ftrange mixture of feeling and mifanthropy, the ordinary guide of the actions of my life, abated the pleafure of feeing again friends who were fo dear to me; or in other words, the Cape was not the place in which it would have been moft pleafant to me to have enjoyed their company. From this ebb and flow of pleafure and uneafinefs refulted a fentiment no lefs fingular. I mean a total indifference as to the difcoveries I had made, and with which it was my purpofe to enrich the fineft and moft extenfive of all the fciences. The fight and developement of the curious objects 1 had brought back with me to the Cape afforded me but little of heartufelt delight. The dramatic intereft was paffed. Thus it is with the moft charming concert, which often, when the effect is produced, leaves a void in the foul, and the compofer is coldly employed in putting together the different parts of his mufic.

By degrees my fociability returned, and I feit an inclination for company; but to enjoy alfo my treafures, I was forced to become a ftranger to myfelf.

In all my attentions friendhip had the firf place. I once more faw, and preffed to my heart, the refpectable Boers, whofe health had occafioned me fuch alarm, when I was yet a hundred and fifty leagues from the Cape, and encamped on the borders of the Kriga. To him was I indebted, from the pains he took to get me into his houfe, after my unfortunate difafter in the bay of Saldanha, for all the fruits of fo curious an expedition. He was eager to afcertain the ftate of the boxes I had brought with me, as he had before employed the utmoft precaution in unpacking thofe I had remitted to him in the courfe of my travels. His zeal had made him ingenious, and fuggefted means of prefervation that abfolutely aftonifhed me. To oblige me he had become a natural philofopher; and my collection was not only unimpaired by paffing through his dextrous hands, but he had claffed the different fubjects of it with great propriety and intelligence. The arrangement of this cabinet, when I did not even know whether it had efcaped the accidents of fo tedious a conveyance, was a fight truly ravifhing. I had felt great anxiety refpecting this firft collection. When I called to mind the various ways in which it might be injured, the diftance from which it was fent, the nature of the roads, the fucceffive and continual effect of heat and rain, and the careleffnefs, perhaps, of the perfons to whom it had been intrufted, I expected to find at beft nothing but a wreck. On the contrary, my animals had gained new life, and feemed to breathe under the eye of their mafter. Such cares, fuch precaution and delicacy, could not fair to render at laft my return agreeable to me.

A vifit to the boxes which had arrived with me completed my fatisfaction. Every thing they contained was equally brilliant and whole. My birds, which amounted to a thoufand and eighty, were as frefh as at the moment when they were killed and prepared; mybutterflies retained all their purity, and there was not an infeet that had loft fo much as a feeler. On this account the method I employed in packing and conveying them became additionally dear to me. The kind of box that I invented for the purpofe has been defcribed in the firft volume of my former travels; and experience has fo fully convinced me of its excellence that I cannot too often recommend the ufe of it.

The news of my return was foon fpread through the Cape, and a crowd of idlers hatened from every quarter requefting to fee what they called my new curiofities. The trouble of continually opening and fhutting my boxes determined me to add this portion of my riches to that which my friend hal fo ingenioufly arranged in my ablcence. I began with claffing the different fpecies of birds, not indeed methodically, but, in a natural feries, by pairs, male and female together.

Almoft the whole of Boers' houfe was converted into a cabinet of natural hiftory, and this fort of decoration, at once fplendid and novel, attracted fo much company, that one might have fuppofed it the general place of rendezvous of the whole town. It was never without vifitors. What kind of curiofity influenced thefe vifitors, and what intereft was felt for the arts and fciences, by a people wholly engroffed by mercantile fpeculations, may be judged from the circumftance, that the objects which afforded them the greateft delight were frequently thofe belonging to the cantons nearef the town, and that there was not an inhabitant of the Cape, who, even in his moft ordinary walks, might not obferve fubjects of natural hiftory, extremely valuable to any but an African. How is it when nature, at every ftep produces a miracle under our feet, that men can be fo indifferent to her worlhip, and that the love of gold can compenfate the pleafure which the difcovery of one only of her fecrets is capable of affording ?

Among thefe inquifitive perfonages there were many, however, whofe deportment in fome degree flattered my fenfibility. At fight of the rareties which I had brought fo far, I remarked a much lefs intereft for the fruit of my travels thap for the traveller himfelf. They could hardly conceive the poffibility of my having efcaped the numerous perils which had before been exaggerated to me; and if, like Ulyffes, my family had refided at the Cape, the report of my death would have given me more than one fuitor to contend with, and more than one Eumeus to feduce.

A fill greater number regarding my labours as futile and unproductive, were continually teazing me with the queftion, "Well, what gold mine have you found?" Gold was the idol of thefe men, and a fingle grain of this omnipotent metal would have produced more effect upon them than the moft humane and generous, fentiments. Every expedition that brought no gold with it, was, in their eftimation, fo much time wretchedly mifpent. This paffion for gold is the chain that links together the fcattered Dutch. I remember, that in my early youth, when my father took me with him to a diftance from the colony, and we brought back with us, to Paramaribo, fome curious objects for the embellifhment of his cabinet, the inhabitants never failed to ank why inftead of thefe things we had not brought gold.

But let me not forget that I found among the crowd fome enlightened amateurs, whofe fuffrage were a counterbalance to thefe repeated mortifications, and by whom my labours were in a manner appreciated and felt.

In the number of thefe judges I ought particularly to diftinguifh Colonel Gordon. He had traverfed, like myfelf, fome of the fouthern countries of Africa. To many of the literati of Europe his obfervations are known. Should he read this account, he will find in it the pledge of an efteem that is without bounds. May it induce him to extend his reputation by publilhing his difcoveries. He owes to Europe an account of fuich complete refarches, and which reiate to fo interefting a part of Africa. They are the property of the fience, which would then no longer remain buried in' oblivion. The Colonel was frequently delighted with the manyand various fpecies $P$ had collected, and he hefitated not to acknowledge that the majority of them were perfectly new to him.

It is true, that, bound to fociety by no tie that interfered with, or controuled my favourite purfuits, abfolute mafter of my time, and difengaged from every affection but that of the chace, I gave myfelf up to its exercife like a true favage. A favage indeed has no inducement but want; whereas I often affixed to the conquett of a fingle object whofe exiftence I had difcovered, a price that no watchings and no fatigue could counterpoife. Whenever, allured by the cry, or other token of fome new bird, the ordinary means were infufficient, I fet my invention to work that it might not efcape, and if it were neceflary to fpend a whole month in purfuing, or rather in waiting for my prey, I immediately pitched my tent, and never quitted the place till I had obtained it.

It is to this unbending perfeverance I owe the advantages of poffeffing almoft every fpecies of bird belonging to that part of Africa over which I travelled. I ufe the word almoft, becaufe there are certainly events that exceed the limits of our power. Who does not know, for inftance, how much the changes of feafon are calculated to drive from the hunter, or bring within his reach, fpecies of birds, which he can then derive only from chance? It is thus with birds of paffage. In countries fubject to heavy rains, to long droughts, or confiderable varieties of atmofphere, fuch birds no doubt come and go much oftener than in Europe, where we experience no alternative but that of heat and cold ; and no fportfman, however dextrous, ought to expect any thing more than to obtain a collection that fhall bear fome degree of proportion to the variety of fpecies: to difcover all that exift of this kind, the life of man would be infufficient.

My days were ufefolly and almof wholly occupied in claffing my treafures, keeping my cabinet in order, and thinking upon the means of fupplying its deficiences, in order to form a complete fyftem, that fhould one day, under the infirmities of age, confole me for the incapacity of fudying the elements at their fource, and deprive me of regret at the recollection of a difcipline that cannot be commenced again but by a recommencement of life. I promifed myfelf in idea greater pleafure from my fecond, than I had enjoyed in my firf travels. The compafs of experience would now be my guide and enable me to furmount the moft tremendous obftacles. How far our forefight can extend, and how near a fecond precipice frequently is to that which we have efcaped, will be feen in the fequel.

I had in a manner prepared all that was neceffary for my expedition: but the moment of my departure from the Cape did not advance fo rapidly as I wifhed. A perfon whom I had looked for with the moft tormenting impatience, whom I had not feen fince my return, and without whom I could promife myfelf neither pleafure or fafety, was abfent. This was no other than Klaas, who at laft fuddenly prefented himfelf before me. There was then at the houfe of the fifcal, a felect, but numerous party of friends. Klaas enjoyed, wherever he went, no inconfiderable fhare of reputation. The affociate of my travels, and entrufted by me more particularly than the reft with the execution of my plans, I could not be too lavih in my praifes of this my faithful privy-counfellor. His fudden arrival excited in the houfe of Boers the moft lively curiofity. Nothing was thought of but my friend, and, as he entered, every one fpontaneoully rofe from his feat. I had owed every thing to his attachment and fidelity, and he inftantly received teftimonies of efteem that were a fort of compenifation, The fifcal drew his purfe and made him a confideråble prefent; an example that was followed by the whole company. Stupified with aftonifhment, Klaas looked at the wealth that was thus fhowered upon him, and thought himfelf as rich as the governor himfelf.

A fingle thought, however, with which his mind laboured, foon abforbed every fentiment that arofe from this unexpected reception. Upon entering, he had advanced towards me to teftify his joy, but his emotion was fo great as to deprive him of utterance. He alfo had a prefent to make. With half-opened mouth, and eyes brimful of tears, he held out a packet to me, confifting of a box or two, upon which he appeared to fix an extraordinary value. I played a little with his agitation, which increafed the filence of thofe who were fpectators of the fcene. At laft I relieved him from his em= barraffmeht, or he would otherwile, I believe, have remained all night in the fame attitude. "Well," faid I, "for whom are thefe boxes?" "For you, for you!" faid he. "They are " full of thofe animals of which you are fo fond.
" If I have been tardy in returning, it was only " that I might not come empty hianded, and " without bringing with me fomething to "prove that I had not forgotten you. I am " afraid, however, that the birds are neither fo " beautiful nor fo rare, as thofe which we have " killed in our excurfion."

Judge of my aftonifhment and joy, when, upon opening the boxes, I perceived a well-arranged collection of handfome infects, with fome birds very expertly fkinned, and agreeably to the method which he had feen me fo often practice in the defarts. I freely confefs that no teftimony of favour or efteem has ever filled my heart with fo pure and delicious a fentiment as this frank and artlefs proceeding on the pait of my Hottentot, and the knowledge, that during our feparation, which had by no means been fhort, his thoughts had been employed folely upon me. Worthy and excellent nat tion! ye wits of Europe, match me if you can, with all your ingenious delicacy and fublime ideas of generofity, a trait of friendhip and feeling, fimple and genuine as this. My dear Klaas, how often, invited to the houfes of perfonages of rank, complimented by fome, careffed by others, difinguifhed by all, how often, in the midft of flattering favours and brilliant promifes, have I opened your box of infects, and thanked you for the fhort, but delicious inftants of pleafure, which formerly diverfified the tedious hours, when my fingle refource was to difplay to you my knowledge, and unwillingly to entrap your applaufe !

Klaas did not ftay long after he had delivered his prefent. The treafure he had received began to embarrafs him. He thought of the wife I had given him, into whofe hands he was eager to depofit his wealth. Having firft learned from him, that the other companions of my travels, fcattered here and there in the vicinity of his horde, were tranquil and happy, my catthe in good condition, my waggons and furniture under cover and fecure, and my whole caravan ready to attend me at a moments fummons, I embraced my faithful coadjutor and fuffered him to depart.

This unexpected vifit on the part of Klaas brought
brought to my recollection another companion of my travels; a good friend, a faithful fervant; extremely cunning, fruitful in expedients in times of emergency, and by whom I had more than once been extricated from embarraffments. The whole compariy were defrous of feeing him, and we walked towards his houfe as if to inform him that I was on the point of fetting off. There was a fort of playful contention who fhould be the firt to tell him the news. The reader will perceive that I am feeaking of $m y$ ape. There could be no feftivity unlefs he was of the party. Boers and myfelf were accuftomed to vifit him every day after dinner, and to take with us fome of our deffert. Naturally gentle and careffing, he was free from the faults of his fpecies, and had rather imbibed thofe of his mafter. He feemed alfo to have acquired fome virtues, for he was fenfible te kindnefs and civilities, and always eager to repay them. I knew but one perfon whom he would not fuffer to ftroke him; and to him he bore a moft extraordinary enmity. This was an officer of the Pondicherry regiment, who lodged like myfelf in the houfe of the fifcat, and who, to try the affection of my ape, pretended one day to frrike me. At this fuppofed ill treatment Kees was in a terrible rage, and from that moment took a diflike to the officer. At whatever diftance he perceived him approaching, his cries and geftures fufficiently denoted the defire he felt of avenging me. He grinded his teeth and made the moft painful efforts to dart upon himr. In vain had the offender frequently attempted, by the offer of dainties, to foften his anger. Refentment had left a profound hatred in the foul of Kees, which it required a long time to efface.

The impotence of his exertions, to wipe away the ftain which my honour had fuffered by the affront, denotes that the unfortunate animal was chained. It was the fear of lofing him that induced me to adopt fo degrading a meafure. His fame had gained him fuch numerous friends, that, if he efcaped from the houfe, he was fure to be folen, either by the failors who would have conveyed him on board, or by the inhabitants of the Cape, who would have fecreted him till I was gone, or even by the flaves who would have roafted and eaten him.

Poor Kees appeared to have a melancholy fenfe of his flavery. Boers, indeed, had provided him with a very handfome kennel ; but Vol. I.

is there any enjoyment without liberty? My ape, befider, poffeffed a degree of moral perception, which rendered his fituation more painful than it would have been to a vulgar ape. The moment he faw me, he flew the whole length of his chain to meet me; and it was me in particular that he feemed to upbraid with ingratitude for his captivity. The period of rendering him happy every day drew nearer ; I hardened myfelf againft his importunities, for I loved him too well to give him an imprudent teftimony of my affection.

In reality, I fhould have had every thing to fear if I had had the weaknefs to have yielded to pity. He might have efcaped of his own accord. A fentiment fill ftronger than fiendfhip might every inftant have allured him away. It is not with the ape as with other domeftic animals, whom inftinct attaches to the foil where they have been brought up, and who always return to it; whether, like the dog, they have greater fondnefs for the mafter than the houfe; or, like the cat, more attachment to the houre than the mat?er. The ape, on the contrary, indocile and refractory, incapable of lafting remembrance either of the one or of the other, retains a propenfity to independence, which the mildeft education, or the tendereft treatment cannot correct. Befides, refembling in fome degree man, in the formation and ufe of his members, he is like him alfo in the faculty of propagating at all times his fpecies; and the reverfe, therefore, of other animals, who, in this refpect, are in a fate of virtual incapacity, except in the fixed and periodical feafons which nature has affigned them. Kees had fill his virginity, and had never known pleafure. The flighteft fpark would have fet him on fire ; an inftant was fufficient to convert him into a libertine; and if, with all the indifcretion and vivacity of youth, he had once lufted after a female, his mafter would foon have been forgotten; he would have followed her into the depth of the woods, and would nevet more have returned. Extremely fond of Kees, and unable to prevail on myfelf to lofe him, I ufed my power as a defpot, and chained him up that I might difpofe of him as I liked.

The reader will forgive thefe details. They are interefting to a traveller like myfelf, who has no brilliant exploits to relate, and no wildernefs of invention in which to lofe himfelf.

C 2 Every

Every day I became more occupied with the excurfion I had in view. This new enterprife required numerous preparations. I flattered myfelf that in a few days they would all be completed. The fatigues of my former expedition were as periectly diffipated as if it had been undertaken ten years ago. At length I was ready to depart.

Unfortunately it was the drieft feafon of the year. Such of the inhabitants to whom I had communicated my projects, and who were moft interefted in my welfare, notwithftanding the defire they felt that I fhould complete my difcoveries, were continually urging me to wait for a more favourable period. The weather, they faid, was inaufpicious and unfeafonable. As if the weather and fexfons which prerailed at the Cape, and in the neighbourhood of the fea, mult neceffarily be the fame at the difance of fome hundreds of leagues in the interior of Africa. I had already fome experience upon the fubject ; but I was weak enough to yieid to the perfuafions of thefe over-timid friends. Another project inftantaneoully occurred to my mind. I according!y deferred my departure till the feafon arrived that was rerrefented as favourable. It will hereafter be

Teen how fatal was this procraftination, and to what calamities it expofed both my people and me.

I had refolved to wihdraw myfeif from the Cape. The circumftance by which I had been induced to adjourn my grand expedition, was an additional motive with me to undertake an excurfion in the environs of the town. It would at leaft be food to my impatience; and I fhould find in this refource, the only one that offered itfelf amidft the eternal wearifomenefs with which I was befet, fome compenfation for the delay which the feafon had impofed upon me. I had learnt, in the fhort converfation I had had with Klaas, that the two Hottentots to whom I had committed the care of my oxen, and the equipage of my caravan, waiting the fignal for a fecond expedition, had conducted my cattle to the paftures of Groene-kloof, and that my goats, agreeable to my directions, had remained in Swart-land, under the eye of my friend Slaber, who, uniform in his zeal to ferve me, had taken charge of them.

What reproaches did I not calt upon myfelf for having neglected, fince my return to the Cape, this worthy and refpectable friend! By what bufinefs, what neceffity, what laws of deC 3 corum, corum, what infatuation of good company, had I been fo long prevented the paying him a vifit? Where could I tafte a more pure and genuine pleafure than under the roof of this honeft planter, who, after my misfortune at Saldanha bay, when I had loft every thing I poffeffed, and was wandering in a ftrange land, without afylum, without money, without friends, without any kind of refource, faved me at once from finking in defpair? The recollection of this virtuous African occafioned me the moft poignant regret. I flew to his habitation, which received for the third time one of his deareft children. The careffes of this charming family were beftowed on me in profufion. From the furprife and joy they exhibited, and the fudden diforder that prevailed in the houfe, one might have fuppofed it to be the celebration of an ancient feftival, or the return of fome important perfonage from an illuftrious expedition. Nothing was thought of but how to render my abode agreeable to me. The parties of pleafure that were moft within their reach and my own, were parties of hunting. They contrived fuch as were particularly amufing. A fober and tranquil excurfion now and then interrupted the labour of this more fatiguing employment.

employment. The amiable daughters of Slaber were the directors of thefe excurfions, and there was a fineffe and a grace in their contrivances for this purpofe, that one could farcely have expected from women fo remote from the cuftoms and coquetry of Europe. For example, they imagined they could not prefent to the regards of their impatient and humourous guefts, a fectacle better calculated to prolong his wifit than that of his own horfes browfing in the fields near their habitation. They led me, without my having the leaft fufpicion of the matter, to an agreeable afcent, where I found my little ftock in the moft enviable fate of felicity and fatnefs. They were indebted for their profperity to the perfonal attentions of my fair friends. We came nearer, and a new fubject prefented itfelf to my furprife. Many of my female goats had yeaned, and brought me fo many kids. No man who has not been in the fame fituation can feel what I felt at this time. My animals were the only poffeffious that had never occafioned me regret, mortification, or uneafinefs. The benefit I had derived from my goats in my firtt journey, affured me of the fill renewed and and more confiderable benefits I fhould now receive. It is with pleafure I dwell upon this incident. May future travellers derive inftruction from it; for, however ingenious may be their precautions in other refpects, they muft expect to fuffer amidft the defarts of Africa, if they do not provide themfelves with oxen as friends, and young goats as play-fellows.

It was at laft neceffary to tear myfelf from this incomparable family, whom I promifed more than once to call upon, in the courfe of my rambles round the Cape. I kept my word. This tranquil and augufthabitation, indeed, like an irrefiftible loadtone, often attracted me at a confiderable diftance, and I experienced no fubject of pleafure that I did not haften to depofit in the bofom of the celeftial fociety that occupied it.

I have fomewhere faid, that one of the men who were moft attached to me, and from whom I had derived the greateft fervices in periods of danger, was old Swanapoel. I had difpatched one of his comrades to requeft him to come to me at the Cape. He haftened thither immediately. I confidered it as particularly incumbent upon me to recompenfe his fidelity; and in telling him that we were to depart together upon a fecond expedition, I gave him a proof of my friendhip that was by no means trivial.

An unfortunate event had formerly taken place, that had nearly coft him his life. In the heat of a quarrel, and from a fudden impulfe of anger, he had fruck a Hottentot woman, who had died in confequence of the blow. The circumfance having been reprefented, in an unfavourable light, to the juftice of the canton, who had no great kindnefs for him, poor Swanapoel was fentenced to be banifhed, for the rett of his days, to Roben ifland. He had already refided there feveral years, when the declaration of war between England and Holland caufed the ifland to be evacuated, and the conviets to be conveyed on board the company's ships. It was at this pericd that I entered upon my firt travels. I have fufficiently fpoken of him in the courfe of my narrative; and fo honefly did he difcharge the offices I appointed him, that I confidered his crime, which was known to me, as having long been expiated. My friend, the fifcal, who had enquired into the particulars of the old man's ftory, did not wait for my report of his character to do him fome fome degree of juftice. Softening, on my account, the laws of which he was the interpreter, he granted me, before I had time to requeft it, Swanapoel's liberty, as long as I fhould have need of his fervices during my abode in Africa. I promifed on my return to apply to the government in his behalf: but foon after, by an impulfe of generofity that I could hardly expect, Boers fet him completely at liberty. He did more: affected even to tears by the account I gave him of this man's conduct, he was defirous of recompenfing his fidelity to me by a prefent, which he afterwards made him, of a complete fet of traveling accoutrements, and by an order that he fhould receive arrears of pay for the whole time that he had been with me. Such were the delicate and provident attentions by which my friends, in emulation of each other, fought to encourage my zeal, by interefting in my favour, in a thoufand ways, the companions I had chofen to partake of my dangers: and thus, by afcribing to me all the merit of actions of which I was but the object, did they artfully inftill beforehand into my Hotantots, that fpirit of fubordination and obedience, without which no traveller in Africa can extend his obfervations beyond the limits of the colony.

To enhance the favour, the fifcal had left entirely to me the pleafure of communicating this intelligence, fo agreeable to the perfon whom it particularly concerned. How fweet is the recovery of freedom and honour! Scarcely had I uttered the words, you are free; fcarcely had I begun to relate what my friend had done for him, than, impelled by gratitude, and as if reftored to new life, the old man threw himfelf upon my neck, which he bathed with his tears. I was ftrongly impreffed and agitated. It feemed as if it were I that had been torn from banifhment and refored to fociety. All the evils I had experienced on board the Middleburg were at once pictured to my mind. I looked back, through a period of two years, to that difaftrous moment, when I had myfelf ftood in need of the pity of mankind ; a moment fo fatal, that it was impoffible for me to fuppofe I fhould one day have an opportunity of exercifing towards another the fame commiferation, at once fo natural and affecting, as I then experienced.

When

When the emotion of Swanapoel was fomewhat appeafed, and he was capable of attending to me, I told him my projects, and promifed he fhould accompany me. In my grand expedition indeed this was impoffible. From its uncertainty and the difficulties that might attend it, and confidering too his advanced age and the fatigues of our forme: journey, I could not think of taking him fo far. But the colony afforded a field fufficiently ample for me to be defirous of availing myfelf once more of his fervices. I hould have been hateful to my own eyes if, at a time when he had fo much reafon to rejoice, and when there yet remained of life a fhort interval which he might fpend in tranquillity and honour in the bofom of his family, I had expofed him at a diftance to the rifk of perifhing. The offer I made him of our traverfing the colony together feemed perfectly to fatisfy him ; or at leaft if he felt mortified at the idea that I hould take him no farther, he was careful to conceal it, and even afterwards, in his intercourfe with my people, not a word of difcontent efcaped his lips.

II have already explained, in my former narrative, narrative, the reafons that induced me to adhere inflexibly to my plan, of keeping at a diftance from the habitations of the colony, and of having no intercourfe with the planters. Befide the interruptions and inconveniences that their vifits would unavoidably occafion, I had always a confiderable fpot of ground, a fort of eftate, to overlook, which I never found in better order than when we had none of thefe neighbours about us. It may be remembered what caufe I had to repent a deviation from this rule at Agter-BruintjesHoogte. Though I had intercourfe with thefe planters for four hours only, it fpread fuch a fpirit of infubordination in my camp, that it required all my firmnefs to reeftablifh order and a good underftanding. To this unlucky circumftance, to thefe firf fruits of fo dangerous a communication, do I owe the misfortune of never vifiting the country of Caffraria, a country fo extremely curious, as to merit of itfelf a feparate expedition, and fo interefting, that I hall all my life regret the not having known it.

In my prefent plan of traverfing the colony, properly fo called, and ftudying the humour of its half favage, half polifhed inhabitants, $\frac{1}{1}$ could not avoid incurring fuch rifks. I took care, however, to affociate with fuch Hottentots only from whom I had nothing to fear, or whom I could difmifs at my pleafure. This little excurfion bećamè every day more interefting to me. It was in a manner the frame of the grand picture I was defirous of iketching. To have rambled, during my abode at the Cape, from habitation to habitation, in the neighbourhood of the town, was little gratification to me. I muft penetrate farther, and make the tour of the colony at large, to procure, if poffible, a topographical plan of it. A radius of forty or fifty leagues would be too infignificant a diftance to prevent my returning the moment I defired it; and at prefent there feemed to be no plan better calculated to confole me under the mortification I felt from the fufpenfion of my journey into the defart.

It was in this little enterprife $\mathbf{I}$ engaged Swanapoel. I did fo with the lefs reluctance, as I confidered it only as a pleafant journey, that would be unaccompanied either with fatigue or danger. I allowed him a day or two to enjoy with his friends the liberty that had had been conferred upon him, and appointed his return as the fignal of our departure. He was exact to his time, and the moment he appeared we mounted our horfes. I took with me fuch conveniences and fuch preparations only as are indifpenfable when the intention is to pafs fome time in the country. The colony was thoroughly known to Swanapoel, who had advifed me not to incumber myfelf with ufelefs luggage, affuring me that I fhould in all cafes find fufficient opportunities for the fupply of my wants, and be every where received with the kindeft and moft liberal hofpitality. The practice of this admirable virtue, which is almoft banifhed from the face of the earth, was of ufe to me on this occafion; but it would have been fatal to my people, whom it would have difgufted with the fatigues they had to fhare with their chiefs, and infallibly prevented them from following me.

I took the route of Hottentot-Holland, intending to proceed from thence to every point of the colony, as far as the Twenty-four Rivers, and afterwards to return by way of Swartland, where I fhould have an opportunity or once more repofing myfelf under the roof of my worthy friend Slaber.

I hall enter into no particulars refpecting the producions of the different cantons, their ftate of cultivation, and other objects of which I have already treated. I fhall confine myfelf, in the few obfervations I have to make, chiefly to the character of the inhabitants, and their mode of living ; digreffing only for a moment to notice an excellent fpring of hot water which the company has converted into a bathing place for the fick, and which is therefore called the hot-baths. It was there that Boers, in a ftate of defpair, and abandoned by his phyficians, recovered his health. How gladly would I have erected a temple upon this fpot, which had been the means of faving a valuable friend whom death had fo long perfecuted! I would have furrounded it with a fence, and have had it deified. In imitation of the charming. and magick ages of mythology, thofe days of profound and ingenious fiction, when rivulets, brooks, and fountains, had each their fecret fymbols, and called to mind fome beneficent deity, I would have offered to the naiad of thefe waters a homage that pofterity would perhaps have confecrated.

In vifiting Franche Hoeck, I did not, as before, regard without intereft that race of French refugees, formerly perfecuted by their unjuft country, ftripped, profcribed, difhonoured as fo many wretches unworthy to exift. Victims of fanaticifm and intolerance, and deftitute of every other refuge, they repaired to this miferable folitude, which the pity of fome neighbouring governments affigned them; a pity which would have feared to have allowed them a refidence too near the feat of their original difafter. Banifhed from France, they have even forgotten the language; but they have not forgotten their calamity. Their cuftoms they have borrowed from the Dutch, their original character being totally loft; but they are diftinguifhed, for the moft part, by the darknefs of their hair, which forms a ftriking contraft with the almoft white hair of the other inhabitants. It is thus that invifibly are deftroyed the modifications that the life of man receives from his government, his education, and his laws. Every thing is gradually annihilated, recompofed, revived; a few traVol. I.

ditions only remain, as a folitary tefimony through fucceffive ages.

The lot of thefe unhappy fugitives, martyrs of their religion, whatever it be, who have forfaken every thing, even the tombs of their anceftors, to traniplant themfelves to the extremities of Africa, excited in my breaft the moft tender commiferation, of which they little fufpected the caufé. Since my return to France, though immenfe, oceans feparate us from each other, this interef has daily increafed. Liberty would willingly efface, the very remembrance of fo daftardly a profcription. The younger children of thefe wretched parents will perhaps one day find, in their old country, the enjoyment of all the bleffings which the rage of prietts and the fatal complaifance of a defpot have robbed them of.

I can no where fo properly relate as here the manner in which grants of land were formerly made in this fo long uncultivated country, and the ufages that ftill take place upon the fubject. I could wifh the reader to be particularly attentive to this account, in which he will difcover fomething of the origin of human poffeffons and eftablifhments.

I owe it to chance, which directed my fteps to the Rooye-Zand, or Red-fand colony.

Fatigued with the extreme heat of the weather, and defirous of refting myfelf, I one day at noon entered an habitation that offered itfelf, where it was my intention to remain till the cool of the evening. There was nobody in the houfe but a young woman, of a charming figure, and who appeared to be about fixteen years of age. I paid my refpects to her, and, agreeably to the cuftoms of the country, faluted her. My eyes involuntarily wandered round the room. Conceiving that my aftonifhment arofe from the circumftance of her being alone, fhe anticipated what the imagined I was about to fay, by telling me that her father and mother were abfent upon bufinefs. Surprifed they fhould be from home in the burning heat of the day, I afked by what accident they had been compelled to leave her. "Why," faid fhe, "we were " told this morning that fomebody had plant" ed a baaken (a ftake) upon our eftate; and " my parents, alarmed at the intelligence, ". immediately fet off to enquire upon the " fpot into the truth of the report." At a lofs to conceive how a ftake driven into the ground could be of fo much importance as to oblige thefe planters, contrary to their ufual cuftom, to expofe themfelves to the intenfe heat of the fun, and even to abandon their daughter, I replied very fimply, that if one man, paffing by, had planted this fake, the next comer would perhaps take it away again, and that there was nothing in the circumftance fo extremely urgent. I even offered, if her parents did not fucceed in difcovering it, to pull it up myfelf if I paffed that way. The bufinefs, the faid, depended neither upon them, upon me, nor any other perfon. But her father, fhe added, would fhortly be at home, who would give me a more particular hiftory of the baaken. Meanwhile fhe invited me to take fome refrefhment, and to bear her company.

Her parents, as fhe had fuppofed, foon arrived. The father careffed her for detaining me, and I was loaded with civilities on the part of the mother. We fat down to table. An unreftrained cheerfulnefs prefided at the meal. The melancholy affair that had occafioned fuch alarm was arranged, and all parties fatisfied.

I longed for the promifed hiftory of the ftake. Thefe good people are flow in their motions, motions, and it was not till after many preambles, in which however I gave myfelf up to the moft charming diftractions, that my hoft began as follows.
" You muft know," faid he, "that, in this " country, to fee and to poffefs are nearly " the fame thing. When an inhabitant of " the Cape wants to obtain a fpot of ground " in the colony, whether for agriculture or " for grazing, he traverfes different cantons, to " look out for a fituation that may fuit him. "When he has found it, he fets up what is " called a baaken, as much as to fignify to " any one who may be looking out with a " fimilar purpofe, that the fpot is already " occupied. Then he returns to the Cape, " and applies to the government for a regular " permiffion and title. This fort of folicita" tion is feldom refufed; but, as the grants of " uncultivated ground made by the company " are ufually a league fquare, it happens, " fometimes from miftake and fometimes from " malice, that the baaken has been fet up upon " the ground of a former proprietor; or that " in the circumference granted him, of which " the baaken is the centre, fome part of ano" ther man's land is included. In this cafe,
" to terminate the difpute, arbitrators are fent
" for, and a decifion obtained. If the quef-
" tion be not much involved, a compromife " is eafily made; but in many cafes it happens
" otherwife. Then commences a regular
" fuit at law, and an eternal fubject of va" riance and hatred between the two parties.
" Another misfortune in fuch cafes is, that " the original proprietor is rarely at liberty to
" quit his farm, and to undertake the ma" nagement of his own caufe, which affured-
" ly he is the perfon to underftand beft.
" The trial, however, goes on, and the ad" vocate, who has frequently never feen the
"fpot, acquits himfelf as well as he can.
"The judge, who is equally in the dark,
" gives fentence accordingly; and thus your
"Europeans, who think that no people have " underftanding and reafon but themfelves,
" forget that they have not lefs a monopoly
" of corruption and vice. The fimpleft dif-
" putes often terminate in the ruin of fami" lies, while nobody gains by them, except
" it be the judge, whofe trade thrives upon
" this fpecies of nourifhment. The planters,
" on the other hand, whofe condition re"s moves them from the bufle, fubtlety, and
"intrigue of large towns, fettle thefe things " in the cleareft and moft fagacious manner, " with no other inीrucior but good fenfe, " and no other guide but reafon." Philofopher as my holt affected to be, and though his countenance, which became animated at every Atroke of fatire that efcaped him againft the inflitutions of fociety, was expreffive of confiderable energy, candour, and good fenfe, I have taken the liberty of abridging his narrative, leaving it to the reader's imagination to fupply what I have omitted.

I proceeded on my journey in the evening, after receiving a kifs of peace and good will from the whole family.

From Rooye-Zand I paffed into the canton of the Twenty four-Rivers, the moft pleafant fpot, beyond difpute, in the Dutch fettlement. It derives its name from the numerous ftreams by which it is watered; and hence we may judge how productive and picturefque it muft be. The principal canals, alfo, by the drain's which are judicioufly cut, convey abundance and fertility to all the cultivated grounds in the neighbouring farms; and the inhabitants exercife confiderable fkill in increafing or diminifhing the body of thefe waters, fo favourable to their crops. In no part of the colony do the meadows enjoy the fame degree of fmiling verdure; the frefhnefs of which is fuch, that the fight alone is fufficient, in this burning climate, to fafcinate the eye of the traveller, charm his imagination, and actually fufpend his fatigues. The canton of the Twenty-four-Rivers is the Eden of Africa, where we walk through groves of pampelmoes", citrons, and oranges; where the fmell is delicioufly regaled by the perfume of the flowers, and where a flight fhade invites to repofe, to thoughtfulnefs, and meditation. Every thing round thefe gardens equally tends to fupport the delufion of enchantment. The eye extends to a diftance, and beholds a magnificent horizon. Some rifing hills embellifh and diverfify the plains, which are bounded by mountains, the fummits of which are hid among the clouds. We find at our feet whatever is neceffary to our wants, or that conftitutes the enjoyment and luxury of life. The attraction of this fpot is fo great, that we cannot help wifhing we could build an habitation and refide there for ever. The houfes are clofer together, and are gradually increafing; fo that I fhould not wonder if they were fhortly to exhibit the feectacle of a fecond town in the colony, and the valley of the Twenty-four-Rivers become at laft the richeft and moft populous country in the environs of the Cape.

I have faid, that it was my intention to return by way of Swart Land to the Cape, and fpend a few days with my good friends, or rather, as I may call them, my good relations, the Slabers. Among the diverfions in which we were accuftomed to engage together, there was one that, at the time it was propofed, and even after I had made the experiment, fingularly aftonifhed me. They had promifed to procure me fome birds, which were not in my collection, and which were unknown to me. Whenever a novelty of this kind was the queftion, I was always prepared the inftant it was ftarted. Accoräingly I took up my fowling-piece, and was ready to be gone. "Stop," faid they; "leave if you pleafe " your fire-arms, which will only incom" mode us. The chace to which we invite " you is of a new kind; having never feen " it, you will make but a forry figure. Follow
" us then, and be fatisfied for once with being
" an humble fpectator."
My guide yoked his oxen, and we fet off; he with a long and enormous whip, which the planters make ufe of, and which I have already defcribed; I with nothing but a ftick, which ferved me as a cane. Arrived at the fcene of action, he took his plough, and began to trace out a furrow. The new earth no fooner appeared, than I faw a vaft quantity of very fmall birds flock together from every fide, and almoft alight upon the plough-fhare, which they eagerly followed. Of what could thefe birds be in purfuit, that neither the infrument which was in motion, nor the man who directed it, could terrify them? Alas! they darted to the ground to devour creatures animate like themfelves, the maggots, worms, and infects which the plough expofed to their view. So unexpected a fight was almoft perfect ecflacy. It had one alloy, however. Empty-handed and without weapons, I was obliged paffively to contemplate thefe devourers of infects, without being able to fecure one of them. Thefe birds were killing animals weaker than themfelves; I was defirous of killing the birds; while perhaps behind me was fome more ferocious beaft longing to treat me with the fame kindnefs. Without the nighteft preamble, Slaber coolly afked me which of the birds I fhould like to have. I ventured to point one out, though I had no doubt he was laughing at me. Immediately, flourifhing his enormous whip, he brought to the ground with a fingle ftroke the very fame bird. In twenty inftances that I put his fkill to the proof, he never once miffed his aim. This dexterity of the whip, indeed, is an acquirement general among the planters; but Slaber was an adept in the exercife, whom I never faw furpaffed. It forms an article in the education of their youth, and is in my opinion of more worth than the imbecil fports of our fchools and colleges. I fhall return again to this fubject hereafter, thinking it entitled to a minuter inveftigation.

There are fome cantons, meanwhile, in which this art is much lefs practifed than in others. All the planters have neither the fame occupations nor the fame ufages. They lead, indeed, for the moft part, a life fimple and uniform; there are points of contact and habits of refemblance that apply to them all : on the other hand, they differ according to their origin; and though the monotony of their life extends over the whole furface of the colony, and they, in confequence, exhibit at firft fight to the traveller no difcriminate features, there are neverthelefs fhades that deferve to be pointed out, and which may ferve the better to make known the character of this as yet new nation.

The planters of the Cape may be divided into three claffes; thofe who refide in the vicinity of the Cape, within a diftance of five or fix leagues; thofe who live farther off in the interior parts of the colony ; and, laftly, thofe who, more diftant ftill, are found at the extremity of the frontiers among the Hottentots.

The firft, who are opulent proprietors, and have handfome country-houfes, may be likened to what was formerly called in France petits feigneurs terriers, and differ extremely from the other planters in eafe and luxury, and particularly in their manners, which are haughty and difdainful. Such is the refult of wealth. The fecond, fimple, kind, hofpitable, are cultivators, who live upon the fruits of their labour. Here we have an example of the good effects of mediocrity. The laft, poor enough, yet too indolent to derive fubfiftance from the foil, have no other refource than the produce of fome cattle, which they feed as they can.

Like

Like the Beduin Arabs, they think much of the trouble of driving them from canton to canton, and from one pafturage to another. This wandering life prevents them from building any fettled habitations. When their flocks oblige them to fojourn for a while in the fame place, they conftruct, in hafte, a rude kind of hut, which they cover with matts, after the manner of the Hottentots, whofe cuftoms they have adopted, and from whom they in no refpect differ, but in their complexion and features. And here the evil is, that there is no precife fituation in focial life to which thefe miferable beings belong.

Thefe fluggifh tribes are held in horror by their induftrious neighbours, who dread their approach, and remove as far from them as they can; becaufe, having no property of their own, they fteal without fcruple that of others, and, when in want of pafturage for their cattle, conduct them fecretly to the firf cultivated piece of ground that comes in their way. They flatter themfelves they fhall not be difcovered, and they remain till every thing is devoured. If detected in their thefts, fquabbles and contentions enfue, and afterwards a fuit at law, in which, recourfe is had to the magiftrate (droffart), fart), and which commonly terminates in mak ing three men enemies, the robber, the perfon robbed, and the judge.

Nothing can be fo mean and cringing as the conduct of the firlt defcription of planters, when they have any thing to tranfact with the principal officers of the company, who may have fome influence over their lot; and nothing fo abfurdly vain and fo fuperlatively infolent as their behaviour to perfons from whom they have nothing to hope and nothing to fear. Proud of their wealth, fpoiled by refiding near a town, from whence they have imbibed only a luxury that has corrupted, and vices that have degraded them, it is particularly towards frangers that they exercife their furly and pitiful arrogance. Though neighbours to the planters who inhabit the interior of the country, you muft not fuppofe they regard them as brethren ; on the contrary, in the true firit of contempt, they have given them the name of Rauw-boer, a word anfwering to the loweft defcription of clown. Accordingly, when thefe honeft cultivators come to the town upon any kind of bufinefs, they never ftop by the way at the houfes of the gentry I am fpeaking of ; they know too well the infulting manner in which they would be received. One might fuppofe them to be two inimical nations, always at war, and of whom fome individuals only met at diftant intervals, upon bufinefs that related to their mutual interefts.

What difgufts me the more in the infolence of thefe Afridans is, that the majority of them are defcended from that corrupt race of men, taken from prifons and hofpitals, whom the Dutch company, defirous of forming a fettlement at the Cape, fent thither to begin, at their rifk and peril, the population of the country. This fhameful emigration, of which the period is not fo remote but that many circumftances of it are remembered, ought, I conceive, to render particularly modeft thofe who are in the moft diftant manner related to it. On the contrary, it is this very idea that moft contributes to their arrogance; as if they flattered themfelves that, under the guife of fupercilious manners, they could hide the abjectnefs of their origin. If a ftranger arrives at the Cape with the defign of remaining and fettling there, they conceive him to be driven from his country by the fame wretched circumftances which formerly banifhed their fathers, and they treat him with the moft fovereign contempt.

This melancholy failing is the more to be lamented, as the contagion has fpread through almoft every refidence about the Cape, which is in reality a very charming canton. Embellifhed by cultivation, by its numerous vineyards and pleafant coun ry-houfes, it every where exhibits fo varied and delicious a profpect, that, were it occupied by other inhabitants, it would excite no fenfations but thofe of pleafure.

I myfelf even, whom no interefted motives bad brought to the Cape, who had nothing to afk of them, and who had come into Africa for the fole purpofe of ftudying nature, was once fubjected to the impertinence of their receptions, and learned from experience of what it confifted. The adventure is pleafant : I have often laughed at it with Boers, and hall digrefs for a moment to relate it.

One day my friend took me to fee the famous vineyard of Conftantia, and introduced me to the proprietor. We were received by him, not only with the fame attention and refpectful manner that all the inhabitants of the colony fhowed towards its principal magiftrates, but he was eager to lead us over the immenfe cellars, fo wide that the heavieft waggon might turn round in them, and to fhow us the enormous cafks, with hoops of brafs extremely bright, and the age of the wine marked upon each cafk, with legal atteftations.

The name of this man was Cloete. When bufinefs of any kind called him to the town, which was frequent, he feldom failed to pay his court to the fifcal, and in the courfe of thefe vifits he pretended to be extremely defirous of feeing me again at his houfe, at Conftantia. Finding little attraction in the beauty of a cellar, or a cafk, I had always excufed myfelf. But one day he was fo urgent in his entreaties, and propoled, in fo obliging a manner, a hunt, in which his fons were to accompany me, and which promifed confiderable amufement, without requiring either preparations or expence, that I fuffered myfelf to be prevailed upon, and fixed a day with him.

I kept my word, and repaired to Conftantia at the appointed time, in company with Larcher, one of Boers's friends. Upon entering the habitation of our hoft, how great was our furprife at the parade of oftentatious grandeur, and the air of ftately fuperiority, with which we were received, and which formed a

fingular contraft with the humble and fubmifo five demeanour I had oblerved in him at the fifcal's. Once returned to his domains, and finding himfelf more at his eafe, this petty potentate forgot, in a moment, both the town and his fuperiors.

We confidered this reception as an infult. In the firft emotions of difpleafure, I hefitated whether to ftay or go; and confulting the looks of my companion, whofe eyes in like manner feemed to be interrogating mine, I waited only for his fignal to determine me : but, when reflection had calmed a little our refentment, we thought it much better to ftay, and amufe ourfelves even with the haughtinefs of this lordly vine dreffer.

The fupper was fplendid. There was an abundance and variety of difhes, elegance in the decorations, and every thing fuitable. The object of this pageantry and magnificence was to dazzle and leffen us. So little did the pleafure of his infignificant guefts enter into the account, that we were ferved with the common wine of the country, while he had the impudence to drink himfelf, before our eyes, fome choice Bordeaux, which his flaves poured out for him.

Having

Having left the table, and retired to our apartment, we found this adventure fill more amufing than it was grofs. We refolved, however, to be even with our hoft, and to read him, in return, a ufeful leffon. He had promifed to vifit us at the Cape, and we formed the plan, in recompenfe for his wine of Bordeaux, to prefent him with fome wine of the worft fpecies that could be procured; which, if it did not infpire gaiety, was at leaft calculated to infpire wifảom into the inflated brain of this African Jupiter.

But how great was our aftonifhment when we awoke in the morning, and were faluted with a moft admirable concert playing under our windows! Delighted with the enchanting founds, we endeavoured to guefs their caufe. We afked each other, how it could happen that this fatrap, the night before, fhould have fhown himfelf fo haughty, and now difplay the moft refined attention? We concluded, that either his rudenefs was the affair of a day, or that, being fobered by a night's reft, he haftened to obliterate from our minds the negligence with which we had been treated. Our conjectures and our praifes were of fhort duration. The concert was intended for the amufement of our hoit, and not for ours; and this was not the firt time that it had faluted the walls of his palace. This great man vas accuftomed to be thus awaked every morning; and he retained, for the exprefs purpofe, fifteen flaves particularly flilfal in mufical execution.

Before we fet out on our return, we found our prince laying afide a part of his dignity. Perhaps he faw the effect that his grand airs had produced on me and my companion. He was afraid that at the Cape we Gould be difpofed to amufe the town's people at his expence; and, for a parting glais, he prefented us with the choiceft produce of his cellar ; the wine formuch celebrated in Europe, and which often lends its name to the mof impudent counterfeits, which are offered to us with the higheft oftentation.

What I have faid of the difgufting and abfurd pride of the planters near the Cape, muft not be applied to them all indifcriminately. There are fome, who, by no means, deferve the reproach; and in this number I particubarly include Becker, whofe houfe is the abode of eafe and cordiality. No honeft ftranger ever enters it without experiencing thofe pleafing attentions, the refult at once of politenefs and generofity. Becker, however, was not born at the Cape, but is, I believe, a German.

As we advance into the country, the planters are a fort of farmers; and conftitute, by their manners, cuftoms and occupations, a clafs by themfelves, perfectly diftinct from that I have been defcribing. Situated farther from the Cape; and, of confequence, not having the fame opportunities for difpofing of their commodities, they are lefs rich than the firft. We fee among them none of thofe agreeable country-houfes, which, placed at different diftances from the town, embellifh the country as we pafs, and afford fuch charming profpects. Their habitation, which is about the fize of a large coach-houfe, is covered with thatch, and divided into three rooms by means of two partitions, which reach only to a certain height. The middle apartment, in which is the entrance to the houfe, ferves at once both as a parlour and eating-room. It is there that the family refide during the day, and that they receive their tea and other vifitors. Of the two other rooms, one forms a chamber for the male children, and the other for the females, with the father and mother. At the back of the middle apartment is a farther room, ferving for a kitchen. The reft of the building confifts of barns and ftables.

Such is the diftribution which is generally followed in the interior plantations of the colony: but nearer to the frontiers, where there does not prevail the fame eafe of circumftances, the habitations are much lefs commodious. They are merely a barn, confifting of a fingle room, without any divifion, in which the whole family live together, without feparating, either day or night. They fleep upon fheep-fkins, which ferve them alfo for covering.

The drefs of thefe planters is fimple and ruftic. That of the men confifts of a check ihirt, a waiftcoat with fleeves, a large pair of trowfers, and a hat half unlooped. The women have a petticoat, a jacket fitted to their fhape, and a little round bonnet of mullin. Unlefs upon extraordinary occafions, neither fex wears fockings. During a part of the year, the women even walk with their feet quite naked. The occupations of the men require that theirs fhould have fome eovering; and this covering they make from a piece of the hide of an ox, applied and fhaped to the foot foon after the animal is killed, and while the hide is yet frefh. Thefe fandals are the only article of their drefs which they make themfelves; the reft is the bufinefs of the women, who cut out and prepare their whole wardrobe. Though the equipment I have mentioned conflitute the every-day drefs of the planter, he has, however, a coat of handfome blue cloth, which he wears upon days of gala and ceremony. He has then alfo ftockings and fhoes, and is dreffed exactly like an European. But this finery never makes its appearance but when he goes to the Cape; and then, indeed, is not put on till he arrives at the entrance of the town.

It is commonly in thefe journeys that they purchafe fuch things as they may want to refit their wardrobe. There is, at the Cape, as well as in Paris and London, a fpecies of oldeclothesmen, who deal in commodities of this fort; and who, from their enormous profits, and the extortion they practife, have obtained the name of Cap $\int_{e}$-Smou $\int_{\mathcal{e}}$, or Cape Jews. Thefe traffickers contrive, at all times, to fell their goods at a dear rate ; but they vary the price in proportion as their fock is great or fmall ; of courfe they bear no fixed price, and the planter who comes fiom the defert, and who can underftand but little of this fluctuation, is fure to be duped.

On the other hand, the regular hopkeeper, who knows the probity of thefe farmers, and how punctual they are in the payment of their debts, exerts every effort to prevail on them to. open an account with him. He tempts them by the pretended cheap price and excellent quality of his ftuffs, and offers to remit the payment till their next journey in the following year. It is feldom that thefe people, fimple and unexperienced as they are, perceive the craft that is prefented to them under this guife of kindnefs and civility. If they fuffer themfelves to be prevailed upon, they are thackled for life. Upon their return, there are new purchafes to be made upon the fame conditions; and thus, year after year, always in debt, always buying without prompt payment, they become the prey of an extortioner, who raifes to himfelf a fortune out of their weaknefs.

It is true, thefe buyers, after being thus duped at the Cape, commonly return home only to make dupes of others. The cunning that has been employed to deceive them, they employ in their turn to tempt the Hottentots who are in their fervice. The remnants of fuff, or the frippery garments which they bring back, are fold to thefe unfortunate fervants with fo great a profit, that commonly the wages of a year are inadequate to the payment, and they find themfelves, like their mafters, in debt for the year that is to come. In the end, therefore, it is the poor Hottentot that pays for the extortion at the Cape. The circumflances I have here mentioned, are an epitome of the practices of the world in all conditions of life. The fubtle knave always knows how to impofe a tax upon the fool, who, having paid it, attempts to impofe it upon fome other fool; fo that at laft it is the greateft dolt that bears the burthen. And thus do men chain themfelves together by means that ought in reality to difunite them.

One might fuppofe that the planters, of the clafs of which I am fpeaking, from their practice of agriculture, would beftow fome attention upon the cultivation of vegetables and fruit. This would be fo much the eafier to them, as, having acquired gratuitoufly a confiderable portion of ground, they can be in no want of a fpot for a garden. Meanwhile I have feen no roots or other vegetables regularly cultivated in any of the interior parts of Africa, except in the country of the Auteniquas. Every where elfe gardening is unknown; and if you find a fruit-tree near any of their habitations, it is planted there only as fome great and uncommon curiofity.

Cuftom has rendered the planters infenfible to the want of fruit and pulfe. The facility with which they rear their cattle makes up for this privation; as their flocks afford them plenty of provifion. The chief food is mutton; and their tables are loaded with fuch profufion as to difguft one at the fight.

From this mode of living, cattle are in the colonies, as in other places, not only a ufeful object, but an article of the firft neceffity. The planter undertakes himfelf the care of watching: over his flocks. Every evening, when they return from field, he ftands at his door, with a ftick in his hand, and counts them over one by one, in order to be fure that none of them are miffing.

People who have no other employment than a little agriculture, and the fuperintendence of a flock, mutt have long intervals of idlenefs. It is thus with the planters, particularly thofe who live in the interior parts of the country, and who being unable, on account of their diftance from the Cape, to difpofe of their corn, never raife more than is fufficient for their own confumption. From the profound inaction in which they live, one would fuppofe their fupreme felicity to confift in doing nothing. They fometimes, however, vifit each other; and upon thefe occafions the day is fpent in fmoking, and drinking tea, and in telling, or liftening to, tales of romance, that are equal neither in merit nor morality to the fory of Blue-beard.

As every man always carries with him wherever he goes, both a pipe, and a tobaccopouch made of the fkin of the fea calf, he is fure in thefe vilits to have one fource of amufement. When any one of the company is defirous of lighting his pipe, he takes out his pouch, and, having filled, paffes it to the reft.

This is a civility that is never omitted. However numerous may be the party, every body fmokes: the confequence of which is a cloud, that, rifing at firft to the upper part of the room, increafes, by degrees, till it fills the whole houfe, and becomes at laft fo thick, that it is impoffible for the fmokers to fee one another. Sparmann has given of thefe fmoking parties an account equally humourous and true. For myfelf, whom the fmell of tobacco particularly incommodes, I confefs that when thefe infectious fogs began to defcend to a level with my head, I left the room and ran into the fields to breathe a purer air, and to cleanfe my lungs.

There is another cuftom which, from an invincible repugnance, I could never prevail on myfelf to adopt: I mean the evening bath; a cuftom fo efteemed by the Greeks, and which recalls to the memory periods fo delightful, and manners fo happy. But how extreme is the difference between the Ulyffes and Nauficas of the Greeks, and thofe of the Cape! I have already obferved, that neither the men nor the women wear fockings, and that the latter alfo, for a confiderable part of the year, go without fhoes.

As a practice of this kind muft continually foil the feet, they remedy the inconvenience by a daily habit of cleanlinefs. Every evening, before they go to bed, the Hottentot or negro woman who performs the drudgery of the houfe, brings a tub of water into the middle of the room, and walhes the feet, firft of the father and mother, then of the children and the reft of the family, and, lafty, of the ftrangers. As the tub ferves in turn for the whole company, without the water being once changed, it may eafily be imagined that I, who was to come laft, difcovered no great eagernefs to leap in. To excufe myfelf, I pretended that it was cuftomary with me never to take off my boots, till I was upon the point of getting into bed ; and the excufe was admitted.

Thefe civilities however, dictated by the pureft intentions, and which originate in the afages of the remoteft antiquity, have in them a romantic and facred character that at firft fight ftrikes the imagination. Haw ungrateful Should I have been if I had feen only the difagreeable fide of the queftion, and had felt my heart uninterefted-I, who place in the rank of firlt neceffaries that virtue, fo little known our days; of hofpitality and all the duties which it enjoins? I have been too frequently the object of this brotherly love, which offers us a family and fiends when at a diftance from our own. I have always met with this tendernefs and affection. Every one has been officious to ferve me; father, mother, children, all have ftrove who fhould beftow on me the greateft attention; not by thofe gentilities, thofe expreffions, half-formed, but full of hypocrify and falfhood, which are the portion of your well-bred people; but by that franknefs and fmiling good nature which place a man at his eafe, and banifh from his mind every idea of embarraffment and conftraint.

Thofe who underftood that I had made a diftant excurfion into the country, and had paffed near their habitation, reproached me with unkindnefs for not having turned a little out of my way to vifit them. They fpoke of the pleafure it would have afforded them ; and afked, in a tone of concern that was affecting, how I could prefer fleeping in the open air to a comfortable lodging in their houfe, where they would have confidered it as a duty to render my abode as pleafant as was in their power.

But at that time the object for which I travelled among them depended, I conceived, for its fuccefs, upon my keeping at a diftance.

What proves ftill farther the extreme goodnature and benevolence of thefe people, is, that a ftranger, the moment he is received by the mafter of the houfe, becomes in a manner a member of the family. Accuftomed to a family life, they delight in ties of affinity, and confider in the light of a relative every perfon they love. The children who climbed my knees, either for the purpofe of careffing me, or to admire and count my buttons, called me their grand-father. I was the coufin of the parents, and the uncle of the daughters; and among my nieces, I frankly confefs, there was more than one whofe artlefs importunities and eloquent eyes have frequently made me forgetful of the hour I had fixed for leaving them.

Upon entering a houfe, the form of falutation is, to fhake hands firft with the mafter, and then with every male perfon in the company, arrived at years of maturity. If there happens to be any one whom we do not like, the hand is refufed to him ; and this refufal, of fo common a teftimony of friendihip, is looked
looked upon as a formal declaration that the vifitor confiders him as his enemy. It is not the fame with the females in the company. They are all embraced one after another, and to make an exception would be a fignal affront. Old or young, all muft be kiffed. It is a benefice with the duties attached to it.

At whatever time of the day you enter the houfe of a planter, you are fure to find the kettle and tea-things upon the table. This practice is univerfal. The inhabitants never drink pure water. If a ftranger prefents himfelf, it is tea they offer him for refrefhment. This is their common liquor in the interval of meals, and in one feafon of the year, when it often happens that they have neither beer nor wine, is their only beverage.

If a ftranger arrives at dinner time, before the cloth is taken away, he fhakes hands, emi braces, and immediately feats himfelf at the table. If he wifhes to pafs the night, he ftays without ceremony, fmokes, drinks tea, afks the news, gives them all he knows in his turn; and the next day, the kiffing and fhaking hainds being repeated, he goes on his way, to perform elfewhere the fame ceremony. To offer offer money on thefe occafions would be regarded as an infult.

It will naturally be fuppofed that education, in fuch a country, muft be totally different from that of Europe. The children have not there, as with us, infignificant drums, trumpers, and other pretty but ufelefs toys, which we give them to drive away their petulance, and render them lefs troublefome. With the Africans, the only amufement the children know, ferves at the fame time as the commencement of their education.

It is cuftomary, when the cart or waggon belonging to a planter is not employed, to leave it in the open air by the fide of the houfe. As foon as the children can climb to the board that ferves for a feat, they place themfelves upon it; and, with a whip in their hands, exercife themfelves in commanding the oxen, which are fuppofed to be prefent, calling them by their names, ftriking the place of any one that is thought not to obey with fufficient readinefs; in a word, in directing the courfe of the waggon, in making it turn, go on, or recede, precifely as they wifh. After having fucceffively handled, in this manner, whips fuited to their age, they arrive at laft to the management of a bamboo, nicely tapered, fifteen or fixteen feet in length, with a thong at the end of it ftill longer; and with this inftrument they cant ftrike, at the diftance of more than twenty-five feet, a pebble that is pointed out to them, or a piece of money thrown upon the ground. I have already mentioned a pleafant amufement of this kind, which one of the Slabers procured me, who fingled out with aftonifhing addrefs, among a multitude of birds, fuch individuals as I was defirous of having. Swanpoel alfo, the companion of my journey, would feldom mifs a partridge flying; and, notwithftanding his age, applied his whip with fo much force, that, in one of our excurfions, I faw him ftrike perfectly dead, a duck, of a much larger fpecies than the common one of Europe.

When a young planter can drive a waggon, and exercife a whip, his education is nearly completed; for they never think of teaching him either to write or read. At the age of fourteen he is confidered as arriving at manhood, and ranks in fociety accordingly. He fhakes hands with the men, embraces the women, and fmokes. A fufee alfo is given him, with with liberty to hunt as much as he pleafes. Entering at this period into the enjoyment of all the rights of man, he regards himfelf as fuch, and haftens to choofe among the girls of the neighbourhood a miftrefs; whom he finally marries; for it is feldom that a youth is found to pay his addreffes to feveral women.

The planters being all hunters, from having their flocks and fields to defend from the ravages of wild beafts, are provided with a certain number of fufees, according as the family is large or fmall; and refpecting thefe guns, they employ a precaution that is fingular. Experience has taught them that the brightnefs of the barrel frequently alarms, by its reflection, the animal of which they are in purfuit, and warns him to fly. To remedy this inconvenience, the barrels in Europe are browned; but the planters, who are not fkilled in this art, rub them over with the blood of fheep; an operation which, though lefs neat, indeed, and pleafant, produces the fame effect, fince the inftrument becomes thereby equally tarnifhed.

Upon the queftion of the excellence of fire arms, their prejudices and principles are very different from ours. In their eftimation a gun is never bad, if the ftock and furniture be good. This is the only circumftance to which they attend, when they make a purchafe. As to the barrel, they care but little whether it fhoots well or ill, becaufe they boaft of having a method that will correct the faults of the very worft.

To correct, in their fenfe of the word, is not to make a barrel good that was not fo before; it is merely to make it fhootftraight, which with them is the fame thing. There is, indeed, no great ingenuity in their method; but it is at leaft fimple, and its fuccefs, which is the refult of experience, always certain.

It confifts, as they exprefs it, de roer op de fcboot, in bringing the gun to the mark: in other words, by dint of firing at a mark they afcertain its defect. If it fhoot too high or too low, to the right or to the left, they place upon the breech a fecond moveable fight, which they raife or fink, incline this way or that, as the defect may require, till they fucceed in ftriking the mark. Arrived at this point, they fix the fight, and the gun becomes inftantly a good one. This operation, it muft be acknowledged, xequires extreme patience, and can only be per-: formed formed by perfons who have a great deal of leifure at their command ; but theoretical calculations and the principles of optics are above their capacity. If it afterwards happen, in the courfe of their fports, that they mifs their object, the gun, they fay, does not yet anfwer to the level, and the fame operation is performed again.

In the courfe of this expedition I traverfed Stellenboch, the whole of Hottentot Holland, Draaken-Steyn, Bocke-Veld, Rooye-Zand, the canton of the Twenty-four Rivers, and Swartland. Thefe different countries afforded me little that was interefting, except the profpects, and thefe even were all inferior in beauty to others which I had feen, and particularly to that of the Twenty-four Rivers. As to the manners of the inhabitants, I have already faid that the fhades which diftinguif one canton from another are very few and fcarcely difcernible; we find every where the fame fimple courfe of life, the fame love of eafe; of indolence and inanity,

On my return to the Cape, I found that Boers had experienced a relapfe of his diforder, and hadbeen obliged to refort again to the baths.

He had written to Europe to afk leave of the company to refign his office. Having received and filled it with honour, he wilhed alfo in quitting it to be without reproach; and he had laboured, therefore, day and night to put every thing in order previous to his departure, which he intended fhould take place the moment the veffel arrived with the intelligence that his refignation was accepted. This fedulous application, at an unfavourable period, before his ftrength was thoroughly re-eftablifhed, had occafioned the relapfe. I hoped that the repofe and tranquillity likely to refult from a total remiffion of the functions of office, and the anxieties attached to it, would be productive of the effects he expected, and one day regain him the health he had loft. But the veffel from Europe was not arrived, and fomething, I conceived, ought in the mean time to be done. As he had often expreffed a defire to vifit the interior parts of the colony, and as I had myfelf farther obfervations to make in the charming country of the Auteniquas, I refolved, if poffible, to revive this defire, and lead him of his own accord to propofe the expedition.

Accordingly, fitting one evening with other perfons perfons before the entrance of the houfe, under the fhade of the trees that furrounded it, I entered into a defcription of this country, the moft pleafant in the colony. I related every thing that had attached me to it when I formerly encamped there; how pure was the air, and how enchanting the profpects. I infured him a fpeedy convalefcence, a recovery in a few days, both from his bodily complaints, and that uneafinefs of mind to which he was continually a prey. Thefe agreeable reveries, which roufed him a little, infenfibly led us farther. We advanced even to Caffraria. I vifited the worthy Haabas; I faw once more my dear Narina and her interefting horde; in fhort, I travelled over again, in imagination, the courfe which I had before travelled with my people. We promifed ourfelves the purer enjoyments, as we fhould have none of thofe obftacles to ftruggle with, which, from inexperience, and a too numerous equipage, had every inftant fprung up at my feet. The hope of vifiting Caffraria was particularly fafcinating to me in thefe ideal excurfions; and, at this conjuncture, humanity, I thought, impofed it as a law upon me. There prevailed at the Cape, an opinion that the Caffres were a wicked and ferocious people; in confequence of which thefe unfortunate beings were expofed to perfecutions that could not fail to irritate their minds, and render them fill more formidable. My friend himfelf had been more or lefs infected with this almoft univerfal prejudice. I conceived that, by gradually introducing milder inftitutions among thefe people, an important and interefting revolution might be effected; which could not fail to take place, the moment their tranquillity and fafety, which ignorance, and the terror alone of their name had for fo many years difturbed, fhould, by equitable laws, be fecured to them. The man beft calculated to work this defirable change in the fituation of the Caffres, and their perfecuting neighbours, was the fifcal; fince upon his report to the company of the ftate of the fettlement, on his return to Holland, would depend the regulations that it might be thought proper to introduce for the melioration of the government, and the welfare of the inhabitants, It was neceffary, therefore, that he fhould have perfonal experience of the truth of what I had twenty times told him, of the evils that refulted
from the impolitic adminiftration of the frontier parts of the colony, and the neceffity of appeafing thofe hordes, continually haraffed by the moft flagrant injuftice, the moft horrible inhumanity, which left behind it fo keen a refentment, and of the benefits that woutd flow from friendfhip and a good underfanding.

I prevailed $u_{1}$ on Boers to confent at leaft to make trial of this excurfion; and I little doubted that, if I could once lure him into the country, he would fuffer me to guide him ftep by ftep wherever I pleafed, without fo much as noticing the diftance. His health, however, requiring particular precautions, it was refolved, while the preparations for this journey were making, that we fhould fpend a week at my good friend Slaber's, who was as dear to Boers as he was to my「elf. Whether we departed from Swart-Land, or returned to the Cape, was of little importance ; our route could not fail to be known, as it would be that which I had already travelled, and from which I had returned fix months before; and letters from Europe, therefore, might eafily be difpatched to us, in the fame manner as Boers had difpatched mine to me while I fojourned in the country of the Auteniquas. It was accordingly a fettled bufinefs, and my friend conceived himfelf to be already in my tent.

The converfation that took place upon this occafion, and which powerfully interefted the company, reminds me of a curious event that happened at the fame time, and which I cannot pafs over in filence.

Our eyes were naturally attracted by the objects before us. Mine indeed, by an involuntary impulfe, are fure to be directed to whatever trees are in fight. We perceived the branches of one near us to move. Immediately we heard the piercing cries of a fhrike, and faw it tremble as if in convulfions. We firt conceived that it was held in the gripe of fome bird of prey: but a clofer attention led us to difcover, upon the next branch of the tree, a large ferpent that, with ftretched-out neck, and fiery eyes, though perfectly ftill, was gazing at the poor animal. The agony of the bird was terrible; but fear had deprived it of ftrength, and, as if tied by the leg, it feemed to have loft the power of flight. One of the company ran for a fufee; but before he returned the Thrike was dead, and we fhot only the ferpent,

I requefted that the diffance between the place where the bird had experienced the convulfions, and that occupied by the ferpent before it was fhot, might be meafured. Upon doing fo, we found it to be three feet and a half, and we were all convinced that the Chrike had died neither from the bite nor the poifon of its enemy. I ftripped it alfo before the whole company, and made them obferve that it was untouched, and had not received the flighteft wound.

I had my reafons for what I did. Extraordinary as the fact may appear, and though the perfons who had been the witneffes could hardly believe, even after having feen it; it was to me not new. A fimilar adventure had happened to me in the canton of the Twentyfour Rivers, and I inftantly related it to confirm what we had juft feen.

Hunting one day in a marihy piece of ground, I heard all at once, in a tuft of reeds, a piercing and very lamentable cry. Anxious to know what it was, I ftole foftly to the place, where I perceived a fmall moufe, like the fhrike on the tree, in agonizing convulfions, and two yards farther a ferpent, whofe eyes were intently fixed fixed upon it. The moment the reptile faw me it glided away; but the bufinefs was done. Upon takiseg up the moufe it expired in my hand, without its being poffible for me to difcover, by the moft attentive examination, what had occafioned its death.

The Hottentots, whom I confulted upon this incident, expreffed no fort of aftonifhment. Nothing, they faid, was more common; the ferpent had the faculty of attracting and fafcinating fuch animals as it wifhed to devour. I had then no faith in fuch power; but fome time after, fpeaking of the circumftance in a company of more than twenty perfons, in the number of whom was colonel Gordon; a captain of his regiment confirmed the account of the Hottentots, and affured me it was an event which happened very frequently. "My teftimony," added he, " ought " to have the more weight, as I had once " nearly become myfelf a victim to this fafci"nation. While in garrifon at Ceylon, and " amufing myfelf, like you, in hunting in a " marfh, I was in the courfe of my fport fud"denly feized with a convullive and involun"tary trembling, different from any thing I

"had ever experienced, and at the fame time " was ftrongly attracted, and in fpite of my" felf, to a particular fpot of the marh. Di" recting my eyes to this fpot, I beheld, with " feelings of horror, a ferpent of an enormous "fize, whofe look inftantly pierced me. Hav" ing, however, not yet loft all power of mo" tion, I embraced the opportunity before it " was too late, and faluted the reptile with the " contents of my fufee. The report was a "talifman that broke the charm. All at once, " as if by a miracle, my convulfion ceafed; I " felt myfelf able to fly; and the only incon" venience of this extraordinary adventure was " a cold fweat, which was doubtlefs the effect " of my fear and of the violent agitation my " fenfes had undergone."

Such was the account given me by this of ficer. I do not pretend to vouch for its truth; but the ftory of the moufe, as well as of the fhrike, I aver to be fact. I will add alfo, thar, fince my return to France, having had oecafion to talk with Blanchot upon the fubject, an officer who fucceeded Boufflers in the government of Senegal, he affured me with confidence, that both at Goree and in Senegal the opinion was univerfal; that afcending the river of that name, as far even as Galam, three hundred leagues from its mouth, it equally prevailed among the Moors, at the right, and the Ne groes, at the left; that among thefe people nobody doubted this power in certain fpecies of ferpents, of fafcinating both animals and men; and that the tradition was founded upon long experience, and the many misfortunes they are continually witneffing.

Here again let it be remembered, that I am only the hiftorian, and that I take upon me neither to validate nor explain thefe reports. With refpect to the two inftances I have adduced, and of which I am at once the recorder and the evidence, they will probably be regarded by many of my readers, as the pure effect of that extreme and involuntary terror which every animal experiences by inftinct, at fight of an enemy that has power over its life; and they will allege, perhaps, in fupport of this fuppofition, the example of the fetter, who retains in their place a partridge or a hare, by the mere circumftance of his prefence and look.

To this I reply, that if a partridge or a hare remain remain quiet before the dog, it is not fo much from a fudden impulfe of fear as from deliberate cunning. While clofe upon the ground they imagine themfelves to be concealed from the enemy. What confirms this conjecture is, that if the dog approaches near enough to feize upon his prey, the bird inftantly takes wing, and the hare fcampers away. It will certainly not be denied me, that it is fear which makes them fly. Such is the powerful effect of inftinct in every animal at the appearance of danger. But why do not the hare and partridge at fight of the dog remain fixed and motionlefs with terror, like the fhrike and the moufe in prefence of the ferpent? Why fhould fear give to the former new ftrength, while the others die on the fpot, under all the increafing fymptoms of agony, and without the power of efcaping, as if retained by fome invincible force? The rat does not remain ftationary upon the approach of the cat, but haftens away the moment he perceives her. May not then the look and prefence of a ferpent, and the nature of the corpufcles that emanate from its body, produce a very different effect from the emanation and look of the cat ?

How few are our opportunities of obferving nature? Let us ftudy her more clofely, and we fhall perhaps find, that the has many particular laws of which we are yet ignorant. Before the difcovery of electricity, had an author ventured to affert that there exifted fifh, which, though fmall in themfelves, could give to a number of perfons at once fo violent a fhock, as to make them feel confiderable pain in all the articulations of the body, the affertion would have been regarded as the moft abfurd fable. This fuppofed fable, however, is become an indifputable truth. Without fpeaking of the torpedo, with which every body is acquainted, I fhall content myfelf with citing, in proof of this fact, the Beef-aal, or electrical eel of Surinam. I had for many years an opportunity of obferving this fpecies of filh; as my father, for the purpofe of experiment, kept one continually in his houfe. Upon touching a fringed fort of membrane, fituated under the belly, and extending the whole length of the body, I have always obferved a very violent fhock immediately follow. My father was defirous of afcertaining, if the fhock would be diminifhed by being communicated to a number number of individuals at once; and, for this purpofe, he collected together about ten perfons, who formed a chain by the junction of hands. No fooner had they touched the membrane of the eel, than they felt themfelves equally fruck at the fame moment. Nor was this all. To convince the fpectators that the imagination had nothing to do in producing this effect, he had placed a dog as a link between two of the perfons compofing the chain, who held him, one by the right, and the other by the left foot. At the inftant of contact the animal gave a loud cry; and his pain, which was the caufe of this cry, proved beyond difpute that that of the reft of the party was not lefs real.

Reafoning phyfically upon this fubject, I acknowledge that a confiderable difference ougkt to be made between an effect vifibly produced by the immediate action of a body, and another effect operated without any apparent contact, any vifible medium, like that of the ferpent upon the animals in queftion. But who will affirm that, in prefence of its prey, the ferpent does not act phyfically upon it? Perhaps this death-dealing quality belongs only to fome particular forts of ferpent. Perhaps it is not enjoyed by them, unlefs at particulat feafons, an ! in certain countries. The ancients have defcribed the batilifk as killing with its look. This is certainly a fable; but is it not a fable, abiurd as it may appear, that originally had fome truth for its foundation? No doubt, in remote periods, circumftances may have been obferved fimilar to thofe of my fhrike and my moufe ; or, perhaps, even to that related by the captain. Hence they might have concluded that a ferpent, impregnable himfelf, and always conqueror, fince he could kill by a look, could be no other than the king of his race. From his royalty they would naturally have called him baflifik; and as a fovereign muft have fome particular fign to atteft his preeminence, the poets, who often exaggerate by wifhing to adorn nature, may have added the wings, the feet and the crown.

This digreffion, of which, perhaps, the fubject would have efcaped my memory, was deferving, I conceived, of a place in my work; and, though it has fomewhat interrupted the dramatic effect, I could not abftain from relating it in the order in which it prefented itfelf to my mind. Whatever title may be given to my narrative, it is of little importance whether there prevail in it or not a fcholaftic arrangement. The art of writing is not my object, but truth and clearnefs. I am talking with my friends, and have nothing to do with the trammels of literature.

I have faid, that I had prevailed on Boers to accompany me in my excurfion. An unexpected accident haftened our refolution. Intelligence was brought to the Cape, that a French veffel, the crew of which had mutinied, was at anchor in the bay of Saldanha. $\mathrm{T} /$ is news particularly concerned Percheron, the naval commiffary, who was obliged by his office to repair to the bay in order to take cognizance of the matter, and, if $f$ offible, remedy the evil. Underftending that we were nearly to take the fame route, he requefted a place in Boers's carriage, and was accordingly cne of our party. An officer of the Pendich rry regiment, whofe name was Larcher, made a fourth, and we fet off in a fort of hurting vehicle (chariot de cbaffe) drawn by fix horfes.

The diftance we had to travel was, in reality, but an eafy day's journey, and we intended to halt no longer than was neceffary juft to fhow felves to the crew; but, like thofe tempefts which are always preceded by fatal omens, we found it that day not only impoffible to arrive at Saldanha, but we had to lament by the way the unhappy fate of more than one of our attendants.

The Sout-Rivier (falt river), which it was neceffary to crofs at a diftance from the town, had its banks almoft covered with cormorants. We were defirous of killing fome of them, and we alighted for the purpofe. Upon fetting off again, a negro who was behind the carriage, taken at unawares, was thrown to the ground by the fuddennefs of the motion, and fell with fuch violence as to break his leg. He was an excellent fervant of Boers and very much beloved by his mafter. We were obliged, therefore, to quit the road, and repair to the neareft habitation, to take the proper care of our unfortunate patient. A litter was conftructed, and we had him conveyed to the town. This accident having delayed us feveral hours, and Boers wifhing to regain the time that had been loft, the coachman put his horfes upon the gallop, and drove us like the wind.

We had fome dogs with us. One of them, very much heated by this extraordinary fpeed, and attracted by a fream that was at a diftance, ran on before to bathe and refrefh himfelf. I have already obferved in my former travels, that, in Africa, every dog that plunges into the water, under fuch circumftances, is almoft fure to die there, unlefs fomebody happens to be fufficiently near to take him inftantly out. The dog in queftion, when we arrived at the fream, had already paid the fatal tribute. Facts of this kind are fo common in the colony as not to admit the poffibility of difpute: and here I would fain afk our philofophers to account for this circumftance, and tell us why the dogs of Africa are fo frequently fubject to death, in a fituation where thofe of Europe do not experience the flighteft inconvenience.

It was late when we arrived at the patriarchal habitation of the worthy Slaber. The embracing and falutations being over, there was a general uproar, as it were, in the houfe. They hardly knew in what terms of joy to exprefs their gratitude, as well to Boers as to the friend he had brought with him. All were eager to welcome this friend; I was fenfible of this; at the fame time it was impoffible not to notice the demonfrations of kindnefs that were equally beftowed on their older acquaintance. The girls, in particular, waited upon him with a moft captivating grace. One took his hat, and another his cloak. They queftioned him as to his health and his wants. They feemed to think him not fufficiently unreferved, becaufe he could not find employment for all of them at once. Delightful officioufnefs, charming vivacity! which rendered ftill more agreeable, by the contraft, the plain and honeft good-nature of the father of the family. When they learned our intention of ftaying a week with them, their acclamations of joy burft forth afreih, and refounded through the houfe. It was the triumph of a victory. Our firits were prefently as cheerful as theirs; and fo perfectly were we at our eafe, that a ftranger would have been puzzled to fay who were the entertainers and who the guefts. The firt evening was fpent in arranging our plans, and affigning to each day of our week its appropriate amufements; an arrangement that was oppofed now and then by the women, who did not fail to impofe upon us fome hard conditions.

Percheron, who was of the party, had all this while nothing in his head but the fhip and its refractory crew in the bay of Saldanha. Before he furrendered himfelf to pleafure, he was defirous of peiforming his duty. He afked me, therefore, to fet off with him the next morning, and accompany him to the veffel. This was precif ly my intention. Every other perfon in my fituation would probably have regarded this propofal of the commiffary as extremely imprudent. I, on the con rary, was delighted with it, and had refolved, if he had not foreftalled me, to make it myfelf. 1 had never feen a crew in a ftate of infurrection againft their officers; the fcene was perfectly new to me; and every thing extraordinary, every thing which promifed a new fenfation, had in my eyes an attraction that was not to be refifted. Accordingly, without reflecting upon the confequences of this temerity, without confidering that, in the gaiety of my heart, I was going to expofe myfelf to the moft imminent danger, I appointed an hour with Percheron, and longed for its arrival,

Though we had only four leagues to travel, and had entered upon this journey immediately $\mathrm{G}_{4}$ after after breakfaft, we were again fo incommoded on the way, that we did not reach the bay till the clofe of the evening: a circumflance that put us extremely out of humour, and was not calculated to diminifh the prejudice which we had before naturally entertained againft the mutineers.

The fhades of night feemed to blacken on purpofe, as if to conceal from us the veffel ; and it was with the utmoft difficulty, and by dint, as it were, of groping, that we found our way acrofs the downs. I twice difcharged my fufee to announce our arrival, and to fignify our wifh that a boat might be fent us. Ufelefs precaution! They pretended not to hear us. In danger of paffing the night in the watch-box upon the ftrand, we curfed the fhip, the crew, and the bay. The captain, it feems, fearing that we were fuch of the mutineers as had gone on fhore in the courfe of the day, and who were to return, in the evening, furnifhed with arms, was cautious of receiving us. At length, by repeatedly firing, and by our cries and vociferations, we infpired fome confidence, and a boat was hoifted out to fetch us on board.

To form an accurate image of the diforder to which we were witneffes it is neceffary to have feen it. A fhip floating in the ocean, and deprived of all external intercourfe, is of itfelf a world fufficiently ftrange; and here, by the mutiny that had taken place, it was a world turned upfide-down. The crew, divided into groupes, occupied here and there the different parts of the deck. On all fides were heard murmurs, threats, tremendous imprecations, and horrible oaths; every where there prevailed 2 frightful tumult. The voices of the chiefs were drowned amidit the deafening cries of the men. From the impetuous motions of this unruly multitude every thing feemed to predict fome approaching and dreadful crifis. Some among them, more enterprifing than the reft, acted with greater fury: they flew with rapidity from place to place, as if to communicate their indignation or their fears at the arrival of the commiffary. The feeble light that prevailed in. the veffel gave a gloomy tint to this fcene of horror that bordered on the fublime. It was fo many demons amidft the waves, bufy at the work of preparing torments for mortals. At the fame time we were preffed and enveloped by this licentious troop. Then it was that I

 TRAVELS INfelt all the peril of our fituation. The title of commiffary which Percheron bore, was the reverfe of giving us confidence; it feemed to have brought him purpofely on board to punifh the rioters. The profcription that awaited him was fure to fall equally upon me, who appeared to have accompanied him in order to lend him my affiftance. A general murmur was excited againft each of us. A murmur, did I fay? Alas! we were the criminals; and the menacing looks of thefe terrible judges told us, in a language perfectly int Higible, what torments the power of force, combined with rage, was capable of inflicting on weaknefs and innocence. I had never fo ftrong a conviction as at that moment, by what a flender thread we fometimes hold our lives, and how unexpected is the chance upon which depends our fafety. Had one of thefe confirators pronounced our death, a hundred arms, no doubt, would inftantly have executed the fentence, and the fea would have been at once a tomb for us both.

It is true, I had my double-barrelled fufee; but my companion had nothing with which to defend himfelf; and, as to the officers, incapable ble of exerting the neceffary firmnefs, they feemed, upon our arrival, to be in a dreadful confternation, as if expecting fome fatal explofion, that would deftroy at once both the Thip and its inhabitants.

As it was impoffible to withdraw from the danger that threatened us, we had no refource but to affume a tranquil countenance, and wait the event. . This refolution gave us fortitude. Percheron, little difmayed by the threats of the violent, faid, in a tone of authority, that he wifhed to be informed of the caufe of this mutiny; and that the crew might depend upon redrefs, if their complaints were juft, and upon being treated with lenity if they had unfortunately overftepped, through miftake, the neceffary bounds of obedience: and turning to thofe who feemed defirous of giving him the particulars of the affair, he appeared not to notice the animated geftures and murmurings of the reft. His tranquillity by degrees fo far appeafed their anger, that we were able, at laft, under pretence of doing juftice to every party, to adjourn the farther hearing of the bufinefs to the next morning. Percheron had hoped that fleep would in the mean time calm their irri-irritated paffions, and fuggeft to his mind the means of terminating the affray.

There was no way by which to quit the veffel; and, as we had arrived at this extremity, it would have been equally daftardly and indifcreet to abandon the crew to the mercy of ${ }^{1}$ fo furious a tempeft.

The preparations for fupper afforded but little relief from the trouble in which we were all plunged; and we thought, therefore, of retiring to reft. The captain gave his bed to Percheron, while I had that of the firft pilot, which was fituated in a cabin upon the deck. In this cabin was a window, the panes of which had been broken at the commencement of the difturbance. It is upon fuch things, upon windows and lamps, that your malcontents always vent their firf fite; as if the noife occafioned by the breaking of them was calculated to appeafe and fatisfy their vengeance. Thefe broken panes were a fubject of alarming inquietude; I confidered them as a fecond Judas; becaufe, fronting the head of my bed, they afforded an eafy opportunity to any ill-difpofed perfon in poffeffion of a piftol, to thoot me during the night, fhould the difturbance turbance happen to break out afrefh. To guard as much as poffible againft furprife, I began with putting out the light; then having changed the direction of my bed, and placed my fufee, which was well loaded, by my fide, I waited the return of day, fleeping as I could. In the intervals of iny fleep, I heard, from thofe who walked the deck; the moft feditious difcourfe, threatening the next day to fhow no favour to any one: I faw fome of them pafs before my cabin, and they appeared to elevate their voices that I might hear them. Ai length, day-light appeared: delightful day-light, which diffipates the phantoms of the imagination, and renders alfo the wicked lefs daring and prefumptuous! What we had hoped came to pafs; reflection, and ftill more perhaps the dread of a well-deferved punifhment, had calmed the fury of the moft vehement. Percheron, judicioufly embracing fo favourable a moment, addreffed them in a moft animated fpeech, in which he painted in lively colours the wrongs and injuftice of this rebellion, and the fevere penalies which the law inflicts for fuch crimes; then, artfully afcribing the caufe of the mifchief to the perfidy of thofe whofe love love of diforder had feduced and drawn in the reft to the commiffion of fuch enormities, he promifed pardon to every man thus mifled, who fhould again return to obedience; and concluded his fpeech with a fharp reprimand of the ring-leader, who, though in confinement, was, no doubt, hatching in his mind new trou les. This man, perfectly naked and ftretched at his length, was bound within a chicken-coop, which was fattened and barricaded with clamps of iron. He was one of thofe beings to whom nature has given, with a robuft conflitution, that fortitude of mind, that contempt of danger and death, fo favourable to, and fo deftructive in, factions. He ftill threatened. They had feized him at a moment when he was off his guard ; which was a neceffary precaution, as he was able of himfelf to infpire terror into the whole crew. The bufinefs of bringing to trial and punifhing this man devolved upon the chief magiftrate of the Cape; and accordingly he was ordered to be conveyed thither. From this moment tranquillity was reftored; and we were convinced, from what we faw in this inftance, that, in every cafe of tumult, nothing more is necelfary to recall a mifguided multitude to their fenfes, than to humble them in their own eyes by thowing them the defpicablenefs of their conduct, or to take from them their chief. With refpect to the reft of the infurgents, they were delivered over to the clemency of the captain and officers of the veffel, by whom a general amnelly was granted; and they all returned to their duty.

Having left the hip, and being once again on fhore, we were eager to repair to our company, to relate the circumftances of the danger we had efcaped, and of which upon leaving them we had no fufpicion.

How little did I expect that this fingular adventure was deftined to be followed by a new mortification, of which the confequences swere longin my memory, and that, in quitting for a day my deareft friends, I fhould have to lament the lofs of one of them, and fpeedily to prepare myfelf for feeing him no more!

As I drew near to the habitation of Slaber, I difcharged, as I had been accuftomed to do, my fufee, to inform them of our arrival, and to invite them to meet us. In fpite of my repeated fignals, no perfon appeared; a filence of friendihip that feemed to announce to me fome melancholy news.

My fufpicions were prefently verified, when upon entering the hall I faw the daughters of Slaber approach me with an air of inquietude and dejection. Alarmed at this reception, the caufe of which I conceived related to themfelves, I anxioufly demanded what miffortune, in fo fhort a fpace of time, had befallen them. "The misfortune I have to ac" quaint you with," faid one of them, " is "perfonal to yourfelf: Boers is returned to "6 the Cape, and in a few days you will loíe " him. He has received, in your abfence, " difpatches from Holland, informing him that " his refignation has been accepted; and, as " there is a veffel in the bay ready, at this mo" ment, to fail for Europe, in which he is re" folved to embark, he inftantly mounted his " horfe, with Larcher, to make without delay " the neceffary preparations. I need not fay " how happy we fhould efteem ourfelves if, " after this lofs, we could prevail on you and "your friend to remain with us awhile: at " the fame time it is my duty to tell you, that, "before he left us, Boers forefaw that you " would "would perhaps be defirous once more to " afford him the pleafure of feeing you at the
"Cape: with this view he has left behind him " his carriage and horfes; and here is a letter
" alfo which he has written, and which he re-
"quefted might be delivered to you."
The beginning of this difcourfe had alarmed me, but, from fome caufe or other, I was revived by its conclufion. I imagined that, from a fportive difpofition, they were defirous for a moment of amufing themfelves with me. A letter, the carriage and the hories,-it mult furely be a pleafantry! And fo convinced was I of this, that, notwithftanding the air of ferioufnefs with which it was told me, and the proteftations of the whole family that he was actually gone, I vifited, with Percheron, every room of the houfe in fearch of the abfentees, not doubting but they had concealed themfelves to keep up the jeft. Alas! They were gone!-My benefactor had quitted me! And my only confolation was to haften to the Cape, once more to embrace him before his departure.

The next morning as foon as it was light we entered the carriage, Percheron and myfelf,

and were inftantly off. Arrived at the houfe: of my friend; the firft objects that faluted my eyes were his trunks and packages collected. together to be conveyed on board the fhip; which, as I learned from himfelf, was to failthe next day. In vain had the phyficians reprefented that his health was in too feeble a flate to encounter fo tedious a voyage; that he ought firft to fpend two or three months. in the country to regain the neceffary firength; and that the fhip, befides, in which he purpofed to embark, being too fmall to admit of the proper accommodations, he was rafhly expofing himfelf to almoft certain death : nothing could diffuade him. Prejudiced againft a country in which he had experienced a variety of troubles, and which were likely to increafe, helonged for the moment of withdrawing from it. In Holland, too, he had left a refpectable father, whofe image was alive in his heart, and his feparation from whom he had always regretted. In a word, he preferred the happinefs of feeing his family to the cares and anxieties which accompany wealth and follow in the train of empty honours.

Subject, myfelf, to fimilar recollections, and capable, capable, in his fituation, of imitating his conduct, I could not, frong as was my attachment to him, attempt to combat fo determined a refolution; and I therefore thought only how to employ to the greateft advantage the few and fleeting moments of friendfhip that remained. I was anxious he fhould take, with him fome pledge of my regard. Ne was no naturalif, except fo far as he had imbibed from me a tafte for the ftudy; yet I felected from every defcription of my treafures a valuable cabinet of curiofities of natural hiftory, which I fent on board with his other effects: and I had almoft refolved to embark myfelf, fo great was the dejection of my mind at the idea that I fhould no longer have before my eyes this judicious counfellor, this confoling friend, who had more than once received into his bofom the overflowings of my heart, at a time too when he had his own vexations to devour.

The $25^{\text {th }}$ of October 1783 , a melancholy epoch that has a thoufand times recurred to my remembrance, and that has occafioned me, of all the events of my life, the greatert portion of wearifomeneis and regret, at length arrived.

It was neceffary to feparate. "I depart," faid he, previous to his quitting me, "perfectly " tranquil as to every thing which relates to " yourfelf: I have recommended you to my " moft intimate friends, whofe care you will " experience, and for whom I can anfwer as " faithfully as for myfelf. Meanwhile, that I " may not, when abfent, be totally uncon" nected with your grand expedition; I wifh " to contribute to it a few trilles, that are no " longer neceffary to me, and which I beg you " to accept: they are my two hunters, my "two fufees, and, in fhort, to fave you the " trouble of liftening to a dry catalogue of in" fignificant articles, my whole fporting ac"coutrements."

I was fo oppreffed that I could not anfwer. Without giving me time to fpeak, he pointed to a morning-gown placed on a chair, for which I had obferved in him a particular predilection, though he feldom wore it except upon certain fixed days. "The furf," faid he, " of which " this garment is made, was once worn by my " mother, who, upon my departure for Africa, " entreated I would wear it in my turn out of " love to her, as a monument of her affection *and an eternal pledge of remembrance. I "have hitherto difcharged this duty with the " moft filial tendernefs, though it has long " painfully reminded me that this dear parent " is no more; but now that I am going to "refide with my father to confole and comfort " him in his old age, can I any longer pre"ferve what would inceffantly expofe to his " view the lofs he has fuftained? No; it is my " friend who muf henceforth wear it for me; " by this title is it, my dear Vaillant, that I " tranfmit it to you, not as an ordinary pre" fent, but as a legacy that was bequeathed me, " a legacy that I value, and of which I charge " you to acquit for me the duties, by ufing it "agreeably to the intentions of my venerable " mother."

Such a prefent as a morning-gown to a tra, veller accuftomed to a very different ftyle of drefs, almoft always equipped in a hunting jacket and with a fufee in his hand, will ap-* pear laughable enough to the reader, who will conceive it much better fitted for the fhoulders of one of our phyficians or folicitors of the ancient mode. But the occafion of this fcene, which fo many would look upon as calculated, for a Bartholomew frolic, flamps on it fuch affecting marks of fimplicity, goodnefs, and fincerity, that even to this moment it excites in my mind the tendereft emotions. The gown itfelf is of no value : but the ideas it revives are touching. The hand from which I received it is fo dear to me, that now, after ten years have elapfed, I cannot contemplate without pleafure the remains of a garment, which I made a point of wearing to the laft thread as foon as I became more fettled. The moft beautiful relic of antiquity would not haye been more religioully preferved.

I threw myfelf into the arms of my friend with tears in my eyes, and I felt his alfo moillen my cheek. His houfe, where every thing was in motion, was an affecting fpectacle: it refembled the hurry of a removal upon the approach of robbers. The abandonment of places to which we have been fo ftrongly attached, and in which we have tafted the trueft and moft innocent enjoyments, has in it, to minds of feeling, fomething that is dreary and difconfolate. The habitation of my friend fhared a little in the regrets that I felt for the mafter; an article of furniture, the fimpleft things that he was in the habit of ufing, painfully attracted and fixed my regards. This acute fenfibility is the inheritance and misfortune of a finall number only of human beings : whereever it exifts it gives actual life to the moft inanimate objects. But what rendered the fcene fill more afflicting, was the mournful filence of our common friends affembied round the one who was leaving us. We accompanied him to the boat that was to tear him from our embraces. As he would not fuffer us, to attend him to the fhip, we remained on the fhore following him with our eyes. Arrived on board, he waved his handkerchief from the deck, as the laft, the farewel fignal of friendfhip.

A perfon equally dear to us both took pity on my fufferings, and conducted me to his houfe. We fpent the day in enumerating the various inftances of benevolence which had honoured the pubric and private life of the beft of men. His name was inceffantly in our mouths. While we were thus foothingly occupied, our grief was fuddenily renewed by the report of the guns from the harbour and the port, which announced the departure of the $\mathrm{H}_{4}$ veffel, veffel, and faluted the fifcal for the laft time. I flew to the turret of the houfe, and, with my glafs, I faw the veffel failing fo rapidly before the wind, that it quickly funk below the horizon.

When night arrived, I returned to my old apartment. It feemed a prifon to me. Left to myfelf, I was like a culprit whom all the world had abandoned, and who was delivered over to his remorfe. No lover ever felt more acutely the pains of feparation.

The next morning I was vifited by Serrurier, the new fifcal; Colonel Gordon, commandant of the place; Hakker, the fubgovernor; Conway, colonel of the Pondicherry regiment, whom I have fince had the pleafure of feeing at Paris; and, in fhort, by all the friends of my dear Boers, all the perfons to whom he hadrecommended me, and who joined in affuring me, that it fhould be their bufinefs to make me forget, by their care, a lofs which was notlefs fenfibly felt by them than by me. Every one entreated me to take up my refidence at his houfe; but among thefe offers I ought particularly to notice that of Colonel Gordon, which was made in the name both of himfelf

himfelf and his wife, and with fo much importunity, fuch extreme k ndnefs and fincerity, that it was impofible not to accept it. Befidse, independently of perfonal obligations, and the fervices he bad rendered me from the moment of my arrival at the Cape, he had a tafte like myfelf for natural hiftory, and I was attached to him by this circumftance, as well as by the ties of gratitude and fricndfhip. I refolved, however, not to avail myfelf immediately of this obliging invitation, and I requefted that he would fuffer me to remain in my prefent apartments till after the fale of Boers's effects: for the houfe was fill completely furnifhed; as he had taken with him fuch things only as his voyage rendered abfolutely neceffary.

When the fale at length took place, it proved, beyond any thing that had preceded it, the general efteem which the ex-fifcal had enjoyed at the Cape. The defire which every body felt of poffeffing fome portion of his effects, raifed them to a price greatly above their value. Among his friends there was even a warm contention who thould have fuch articles of the furniture as had been particularly appropriated to his perfonal ufe. All confidered it as a duty wo have one lot at leaft; and I faw, with peculiar fatisfaction, in the countenance of each, as they bore away their purchafes, a regret for the perfon to whom they had belonged.

Previous to this fale, the colonel had afked me to accompany him in an experiment that he was defirous of making in order to afcertain the poftion and bearings of the Piquet mountain, as viewed from the Table mountain. The project was no fooner known in the town, than a number of officers belonging to the different regiments of the garrifon requefted they might accompany us. Of thefe perfonages fome had no other inducement than that of enjoying, as mere lookers-on, the fpectacle of his labour, and others were idlers at a lofs how to employ the day. The firft would be perfeally recompenfed with the fight of a magnificent profpect, and the laft with being able to fay, on their return to Europe, that they had been at the top of the famous Table. Though a troop like this would be more incommodious than ufeful, he yet acquiefced; and we fet out, at day-break, with the neceffary inftruments. A moft fortunate circumstance favoured our operation: the fky, during the whole day, was perfectly ferene, and, what is infinitely rare, not a fingle cloud upon the Table mountain came to annoy us.

Upon this occafion I experienced the enjoyment of a particular felicity; which was that of having killed, upon the platform of the mountain, a bird of a new fpecies, which, till that moment, I had not feen in Africa, and which I have never met with fince. It was the rock black-bird. I brought it with me to Europe ; it conftitutes at prefent an article in my collection, and will form, in the Ornitbology that I fhall foon publifh, a new and interefting fpecies, not unworthy the attention of the naturalift.

A bird killed fo near the town, and at the fame time new to all the inhabitants of the Cape, mult have been a ftranger to the place where I found it. I fufpect it to have emigrated from that range of rocks and mountains, which, from their refemblance to thofe of the north of Europe, bear the name of the Norwegian mountains, and which, detaching themfelves from the Table mountain, and ftretching to the fouth, form what is called the fouthern point of Africa. Many perfons have had the curiofity to vifit this point, but they have arrived at it either by the fea-fide or by the route of Conflantia and Falfe-Bay. I, on the contrary, was defirous of finding my way thither along the top of the mountains themfelves.

So new an enterprife feemed to promife me curious and unknown objects. I had nothing to dread on my journey but extreme fatigue, and the confideration of fuch an inconvenience was little calculated to fop me.

A friend lent me two negroes, to whom I added a Hottentot, and I divided among them the labour of carrying my camp equipage, my carbine, a cloak, powder and fhot, fome dried provifions, and, in fhort, what appeared to me to be abfolutely indifpenfable; for, being obliged continually to afcend and defeend, it was neceffary that we fhould have no incumbrance. As for me, I carried my double-barrelled fufee, had two piftols in my girdle, and was followed by three dogs, the choicelt of my pack.

It was thus equipped, and favoured by the moft beautiful weather, that I repaired to the fummit of the Table mountain.

Seen from afar, and at a certain diftance, this mountain feems to terminate in a flat top;
and hence has arifen the name of Table given to it by mariners and travellers. Its fummit, however, as I have already faid, is far from being a plain. Interfected throughout by enormous cavities, it at the fame time appears rugged with ridges, eminences, and high rocks; which, by their crumbling down and the changes they undergo, atteft how much they have loft their primitive form. Its longeft fide is that which looks towards the town. Not being provided with inftruments, it was impoffible for me to meafure the extent of it exactly. I however attempted it by walking feveral times over it; and I obferved that each time I went from the eaftern to the oppofite weftern extremity, it required nearly twenty minutes: which certainly indicates a quarter of a league in length, at leaft.

While employed in my meafurement, my good fortune rendered me a fpectator of an in. terefting phenomenon, which the curious have often fought to obferve on the mountain, but which does not always prefent itfelf to the eye of the beholder with the fame magnificence: I mean the formation of one of thofe foutheafterly forms, produced by the accumulation of clouds on the fummit of the Table, which is vulgarly called its peruke, as I have already faid in my firt Travels.

This phenomenon I muft here defcribe, but in the moft accurate manner, left the effect fhould be taken for the caufe, and that which belongs to the one afcribed to the other. It was preceded by a train of fog, which we faw brufhing over the furface of the fea, and which advanced towards us, paffing over Table-Bay. Its approach announced to me a moft dreadful tempert ; but I rejoiced that I was able to behold and ftudy at this height the progrels of fo beautiful a fpectacle, at the hazard of fome trifling inconveniences, which could not be put in competition with the advantages I was about to derive from obfervations, which, no circumflances perhaps would ever put it in my power to repeat, if I fuffered the prefent opportunity, which prefented itfelf fo fortunately, to efcape. Without delay, therefore, I pitched my tent towards the eaft, and as near as poffible to that part of the mountain, which, already feparated from the Table by the progreffive and continual crumbling down of fragments from the action of the winds and the rain, is known by the particular name of the Devil mountain, and which is tending more and more to become infulated from the large mafs.

The train of fog foon covered the whole valley from Falle-Bay to the bottom of the mountains, and at length entirely deprived us. of the view of the charming landfcape of Conftantia, Nieuwland and Ronde-Bofch; after which, becoming apparently larger, it foon reached the Table; and, in lefs than two hours, increafed to that degree that it not only covered the fpace which feparated us from the Devil mountain, but enveloped us alfo on all fides. This mift was fo denfe that it was impoffible to diftinguifh any thing at the diftance of a foot from us. The atmofphere, however, notwithftanding the movement of this great body of vapour, did not feem difturbed. I could not perceive a breath of wind; but, in ${ }^{\text {- }}$ return, my clothes were infenfibly foaked through.

I have feveral times had an opportunity of remarking, that, when thefe clouds fpread themfelves over the Table mountain, they covered only the eaftern part of it, while the weftern remained puréand untouched. I knew alfo, alfo, and I have faid elfewhere, that, during thefe fogs, a planter, ${ }^{8}$ who fets out from the town in order to go to Falfe Bay, may make his choice either to walk under a fcorching fun, by procceding to the weft, or to expofe himfelf to continual rain by advancing on the oppofite fide. But, as I was upon the mountain at the moment when the cloud was condenfing itfelf I could eafily afcertain what part was covered, and what was not; and being even enveloped in it I had nothing to do but to walk forwards till I got out of it. This I did, proceeding towards the eaft of the plain, when I found myfelf expofed to the rays of an ardent fun, and under a fky in every part ferene.

My eyes were now gratified with a view of the moft beautiful horizon I had ever beheld. I could diftinguifh all the plantations which decorate the Tiger mountain, Blauw-Berg, Groene-Kloof and the Piquet mountain; the town lay almoft perpendicular under my feet; but when, with my perfpective glafs, I looked at the weather-cocks of the houfes, F oblerved that they were turnea in every direction, which indicated that the greateft calmnefs prevailed there, there, as-well as on the mountain, where there had not been the leaft movement in the air, fince the leaves of the trees repofed in profound tranquillity.

The bay difplayed a feectacle ftill more aftoniming. The northern part of it was expofed, at that time, to a very violent guft of wind, which did not extend to the fouthern part. Thus, three fhips in the latter feemed to enjoy a perfect calm, while all thofe which were at anchor in the other, were agitated by a furious blaft. From this ftriking contraft, and I might almoft fay incredible, in fo fmall a fpace, there refulted a very great difference in the colour of the water. This double effect appeared to me like a magic picture; for it exhibited as it were in the fame frame, and without any interval, at once a calm and a tempeft.

The conclufions I drew from it are as follows: The wind, which had taken its rife on the furface of the Indian ocean, blowing with violence, entered by Falfe Bay, paffed to the Table Bay only through the defile that feparates the two bays, and followed its direction in the northern part of the harbour, while the projection formed by the mountains towards the Cape, and at the Cape itfelf, deadened the greater part of its force. It cannot be faid, therefore, that the collection of clouds on the fouth-weft, which are accumulated over the Table mountain, and which thence precipitate themfelves over the town, occafion there thofe furious blats of wind, fo inconvenient and at the fame time fo falubrious to the inhabitants of the Cape; for I have feen the greateft tranquillity prevail, not only in the town, but in all that part of the harbour, which, being oppofite to the direction of the mountain, muft naturally fhelter them on that fide. During the whole time I refided at the Cape, I indeed always remarked that the hurricane was never by any means fo violent when the clouds remained in a ftate of ftagnation, and, as it were, fufpended over the fummit of the mountain: the fame circumftance happens in all the interior parts of Africa; and every where, in fhort, where great heights oppofe a barrier to this impetuous wind.

About one in the afternoon, judging that the cloud had attained its maximum of increafe, I retired from it in order to furvey it in a more favourable point of view, and to afcertain, if poffible, its height. At a diftance it exhibited the appearance of a mafs of fog, forced together and compreffed by its own weight. Its extremities, or upper and lower edges, were very apparent. I could perfectly diftinguifh where it terminated, and I can affirm that its height was not more than fifty or fixty feet.

The fharp and elaftic air of the mountain had given me fo keen an appetite, that, however refolved I was to continue my obfervations during the remainder of the day, I was obliged to fufpend them for a while, that I might go and take fome refrefhment in my tent: but fcarcely had I again entered the fog when I felt a light wind, exceedingly cold and cutting, which had not exifted in the morning. It was fo weak, indeed, that I afcribed it to the motion of the vapour, which continued fill increafing. As it, however, occafioned me fome inconvenience, and I was here lefs than any where elfe in a fituation to continue my refearches, I caufed my tent to be removed, and went to pitch it at the eaftern extremity of the plain.

My negroes and my Hottentot being totally I 2 ufelefs ufelefs to me in the bufinefs I was engaged $\mathrm{in}_{5}$ I was defirous of deriving fome other benefit from them, by employing them, for the reft of the day, to fearch on the mountain for a pretended monument, refpecting the exiftence of which I had long been tormented.

Kolben fays, that in 1680 the governer Van der Stel having made an excurfion to the Table mountain, in company with feveral ladies of the Cape, and particularly the lady of the governor of the Indies; and being defirous of leaving to pofterity a folemn monument of this party of pleafure, and of the great efforts made by his young companions, he caufed to be erected on the fpot a column or pyramid, with an infcription proper to tranfmit to after ages the remembrance of his great natne. The author even enters into details, and relates particular circumftances of this journey, to induce the reader to give credit to it : but notwithftanding the diligent fearch made by my companions, they found not the fmalleft veftige of this pretended column ; which, if the ftory of it be true, muft either have been deftroyed by time, or fome other hand inimical to fuch erections.

ments of the cloud. Part of it had detached itfelf, and, paffing through the hollow which feparates the Devil from the Table mountain, proceeded to fettle on the back of the latter, where it appeared fufpended, as in a ftate of ftagnation, without having any further communication with the grand mafs. About five o'clock this detached part feemed to be preffed down, and to have become heavier. I imagined thatit was going toprecipitate itfelf on thetown, and to occafion there one of thofe hurricanes fo common at the Cape in the months of March and April, but uncommon at the feafon when I obferved it. I was, however, deceived. Without diminifhing in height, it moved beyond the flat fummit, defcended below its edges, and, winding along the declivity, rejoined the cloud at the Devil mountain, with which it became confounded, fo that they were again formed into one. All this was effected without the leaft diforder in the air. The harbour attelf ceafed to be agitated by the wind ; and fo univerfal was the calm, as to make me renounce all hopes of a ftorm, with the fight of which I should have been highly gratified; but which, by its effects, would have afforded no fuch $\pm 3$ amufement amufement to the inhabitants of the town, who were not equally interefted in making obfervations on it.

The approach of night made me fome amends for this difappointment, by prefenting a very different piture, lefs uncommon, indeed, but perhaps more fublime than the grand tempeft with the fight of which I had fiattered myfelf. The picture I mean, was the fun fetting in the ocean. One might have faid, that it was the arrival of the mafter of nature at the boundaries of the world. I faw this globe of fire plunge with majefty below the waters, and vanifh from my fight. How enchanting was the fpectacle he prefented to my aftonifhed eyes; when, fweeping the furface of the deep, he feemed all of a fudden to embrace the abyfs, in order to regain, as Offian fays, the vaft palace of darknefs. On his approach, the waves raifed their agitated heads to be gilded by his light ; but their colours, illuminated by his rays, infenfibly died away, and totally vanifhed the inftant he difappeared. The ocean was no longer enlightened, but the immenfe veil of clouds which had collected on the eaft, fill reflected his flames from its upper furface. Their whole whole maifs reprefented mountains of fnow, and their top difplayed a zone, refplendent with all the colours of the rainbow. This fpectacle lafted only for a moment ; but at the diftance of about thirty leagues to the north, the Piquet mountains, fill higher than the Table mountain, retained, for fome time, the light on their majeftic tops, that feemed to project from the purple and violet ground of the fky. They might have been ftyled lighthoufes, deftined to enlighten the interior parts of the continent during the obfcurity of the night. How little is man to this exalted height, and how wretched are his paffions when he :compares himfelf with immenfity!

On the approach of darknefs, the baboons had retired to their holes; the vultures had quitted the plain, and returned to the rocks: fome fmall birds only ftill futtered aroznd me, and, fcattered over the thrubs and the buhes, were celebrating with their concerts the clofe of fo beautiful a day. Their fong died away with the twilight ; abferrity gave up the mountain to funereal birds of prey; and I, thoughtful and melancholy, returned to my tent, which my people had already furrounded with a large fire, for the purpofe of keeping at a diftance noxious and deftructive animals that fhun the light.

I had reafon to expect that I fhould meet on the mountain with a kind of enemy fill more dangerous than thefe animals: I mean thofe fugitive flaves who quit their mafters' habitation to refide among the rocks, and who take advantage of the night to plunder the neighbouring plantations. I had to fear, that fome of thefe deferters might be concealed in my neighbourhood, and that. favoured by the darknefs, they might attempt to furprife or attack me. I had, however, taken the neceffary precautions; I was too well armed to dread fuch a combat; and the vigilance of my three dogs, ftill more than my fires, enabled me to repofe during the whole night in fecurity.

The fog became fo moift that, when day appeared, I felt myfelf in my tent quite penetrated with cold, notwithftanding a very thick cloak which I had wrapped round me, and with which I was entirely covered. If fuch was my fituation, it may be judged what my people muft have fuffered. To recover from my numbnefs, I determined to remove to a part of the mountain where I conceived there would be no fog. I expected to find the fun there, as I had found him the preceding day; but the cloud had partly covered him, and he did not make his appearance till he had paffed the meridian. While waiting for his arrival to warm me, I traverfed the platform with my fufee, hoping to procure fome provilions, if I found any game in my way. I, however, faw only fome vultures, which, perched on the edge of their holes, benumbed by the cold, and foaked with the dew, were alfo waiting for the fun to dry themfelves and take their flight. In this condition, they feemed to be incapable of moving their wings, and fuffered me to approach almoft clofe to them. I killed feveral of them ; and when the fun had re-appeared, and I felt myfelf warmed, I ordered one to be roafted, intending to dine upon it with my people: but the fmell was fo difgufting, and the tafte fo deteftable, that I could not endure it. My two negroes alfo loathed it; and even my dogs, after having fmelled to it, turned away without touching it. My Hottentot alone ate of it ; and to him it was tolerable, becaufe it was fat,

When we had dried ourfelves thoroughly, we ftruck the tent; and defcending on the fouthealt fide of the Table mountain, I made my way through the thorns and bufhes to the Falfe-Lion's head; for fuch is the name of a mountain unfortunately celebrated by fome hipwrecks, and very juftly dreaded by mariners. To underftand this, it muft be recollected that, as I have already feveral times obferved, there is another mountain called the Lion's-head, which is a land-mark topilots coming from Europe to the Cape. The falle head rakes its name from the refemblance it has to the real head, though it is not fo high ; and this conformity is fo much the more dangerous, as, near this mountain, there is another, which, terminating in a flat like the Table, reprefents, when feen from a diftance at fea, the weftern face of the latter. In foggy weather, if the pilot, deceived by this refemblance, makes towards the land, thinking to enter the bay of the Cape, he is loft, as his veffel is fure to be ftranded on the fand-banks of the fhore. There is, however, a fure and infallible mark to diftinguifh them, which I think it my duty to point out. The Lion's-head is totally infulated on the north fide; there being only the back part of the Lion-mountain, in that quarter, that can fhow itfelf, and which is confiderably lower; while the falfe head feems to adhere without interruption to a chain of mountains which, on the north, becomes united with the Table mountain, and, on the fouth, extends to the point of Africa, where it forms the promontory. In very hazy weather, indeed, the mark I have here pointed out becomes ufelefs; becaufe, the body of the mountains being then involved in fogs, their fummits only which are above the vapour can fhow themfelves. But in that cafe there is another certain mark of diftinction. The Lion's-head having on its northern fide no other mountain fo high as itfelf, its top mult be feen alone in that quarter ; whereas the falfe head having, towards the north, other fummits equally elevated, thefe fummits and that of the falfe head muft be feen at the fame time. If the pilot, therefore, uncertain which of the two heads he perceives, fees to the north of that head, and in the fame line, the tops of other mountains, he cannot be miftaken ; it is the falfe head which prefents itfelf; but if he obferves nothing on the northern northern fide of the point, and if of the mountains he diftinguifhes it be the laft towards the north, it is the real head; for the rump of the Lion, which forms part of it, is low, and when feen cannot be miftaken. It will readily be remarked that thefe appearances can occur only to veffels which, coming from Europe or the Indies, find themfelves to the fouthward of the entrance of the bay: thofe which are more to the north have a quite different view ; and in that cafe it is impoffible for them to fee the falle head, as they muft then perceive the mountains of the Cape, fuch, almoft, as they are here reprefented; for when I took the view of them I was upon Roben ifland. With regard to the other view, that was alfo taken on my arrival at the Cape; but, the drawing having been torn in two, I loft a part of it. I have, however, fubjoined here the remaining part, which extends only to the Falfe Table.

I fhall not enlarge upon the importance of thefe obfervations: to publifh them is, in my opinion, ferving the caufe of humanity; and had my voyage, after fo much expence and fatigue, been productive of no other good than that of preventing a fingle hipwreck, I fhould have applauded myfelf during my whole life for undertaking it.

From the Table mountain to the Falfe head I every where obferved, throughout the whole tract of country that I traverfed, a great number of birds of the fpecies of the blackbird, the thruhh, and the black and yellow bird ${ }^{*}$; and after paffing the latter mountain, a number of bee-eaters, of the kind which are found in the fouthern provinces of France, and in Italy. At the Cape, as in Europe, thefe charming winged animals are birds of paffage. They flew about in thoufands before me in the valley, and fettled in flocks on the bufhes and fhrubs with which it is covered. Under other circumftances, their beauty would have been a fufficient motive with me to feek for them, but at that time their exquifite tafte was the temptation; and with the advantage afforded me by their numbers, a few difcharges of my fufee directed into a bufh procured a fupply of provifion for myfelf and people for a whole day.

Their abundance in this place aftonifhed me the more, as I had obferved many birds of prey of the hawk kind, which attacked them without mercy. The valley abounded too with a prodigious quantity of green ferpents, of from four to five feet in length. It was the humidity of the foil that attracted thefe reptiles, which was alfo favourable to their increafe. The multitude and fize of them gave me no little uneafinefs; and I had the more reafon to believe them venomous, as my dogs, which generally went before me in the bufhes, now ranged themfelves all three behind me, and advanced with feeming fear. To affure myfelf of what I had to dread from thefe enemies, I killed one, and examining its mouth I faw with joy that they were not dangerous. For once my dogs were deceived ; their inflinct was in fault; and I afcribed the error to the gradual change effected in thefe domeftic animals by education: wild dogs I am certain would not have thus been miftaken.

Another caufe of uneafinefs, and one that appeared well founded, ftill alarmed me: I mean the want of water on the tops of the mountains which I intended to traverfe, thereby to proceed to the promontory of Africa. I was fearful I fhould be obliged to renounce my
defign, that I might not be diftant from fprings and ftreams, or forced to defcend continually from eminences to quench our thirft in the valleys, which would have occafioned at the fame time much fatigue and much languor. We had already enough to fuffer from the continual afcending and defcending required in paffing from one mountain to another, without being ftill forced to repeat feveral times a-day, under a fcorching fun, this laborious exercife. Happily however it was not neceffary. During the five days that my journey lafted, I found in the clifts and holes of the rocks fome excellent rain water, and thefe fmall natural cifterns were fufficiently numerous, and had a fufficient abundance for all our wants.

From the foot of the Table mountain to the point of Africa, the difance is generally reckoned, by the common route, to be eight leagues; I made it, by my windings and turnings, from twentyfive to thirty: but I experienced no obftacle, and I at length arrived at the formidable promontory, the mot celebrated and moft formy of all thofe of the antient world. The dangers of a fea almoft always raging occafioned it to be called, by the firf Portuguefe navigators, the Cape of Tempefts; a fatal appellation, for which they foon after fubftituted the more confoling one of the Cape of Good Hope; when, upon opening to their fight the Indian ocean, it prefented to their barbarous avarice the poffeffion and treafures of the richeft country in the univerfe.

Placed on a fpot of the globe the moft favourable, perhaps, for the grand feectacles of nature; I had on my right the Atlantic, on my left the Indian, and before me the Southern ocean ; which, breaking with fury at my feet, feemed as if defirous of attacking the whole chain of mountains, and of fwallowing up Africa. To render more magnificent the fublime effect of this picture, I had only one wifh to make; which was, to behold one of thofe tornadoes that gave rife to the firft appellation of the promontory. For feveral hours I entertained hopes of this gratification, upon feeing long trains of fog raifed by the wind from the furface of the fea; but my expectations were foon fruftrated, and the air became fo pure and calm that I could very ${ }^{\circ}$ clearly diftinguifh, at the eaftern extremity of Falle Bay, the famous Cape of Needles; which, when when feamen have the misfortune to mif calculate their longitude, expofes them to certain fhipwreck, and where were loft, among others, the ambaffadors fent by the king of Siam to the king of Portugal.

Notwithftanding the ferenity which prevailed in the heavens, the fea experienced a degree of agitation. Its fwelling, oppofed to feveral contrary currents, rendered it alfo noify. The furges had not that majeftic regularity, in which, in happier climes, we fee them roll towards the fhore; there, one after another, to vanifh : a too faithful picture of life, and of the annihilation which follows it: on the contrary, broken againft each other, they dafhed themrelves in confufion upon thofe fhoals and rocks fo often buffeted by tempefts.

As they reached the fhore, the waves threw out a number of fhells, and, among others, the nautilus papyraceus. Defirous of procuring fome of thefe univalves, fo delicateand tender, I went down to the fhore; but I foon perceived that none of them were perfect, being all either broken and mutilated, or elfe blackened by the putrefaction of the dead animal. Obferving fome alive, which the waves every Vol. I. K now now and then prefented to our view, my peo ple waded into the water to catch them; but the moment they approached their hands, the fhell inftantly funk, and, with all the art they employed, they could not get hold even of one; the inftinct of the animal fhewed itfelf to be more fubtle than they, and obliged them to give up the attempt. Amufed as much as difappointed by this dexterity, I called my fifhermen, who returned not a little afhamed at being out-witted by a fhell-filh. More fuccefsful than they, I had the good fortune to kill feveral marine birds of the fpecies of the fea-gull and fea-fwallow. One of the latter, characterifed by a large bill of the colour of red coral, will form among my defcriptions a new fpecies, entirely unknown to ornithologifts.

Befides thefe birds, we faw foaring above the fea, and as far as our fight could extend, a prodigious number of white boobies *, which, with their wings folded and their necks fretched out, fuffered themfelves to drop heavily from the fky ; like fo many maffes of lead, upon the fifh which they obferved in the water. At the fame time the albatroffes and frigats, more nimble in their motions, feized their prey, while brufhing the furface of the waves with an eafy and rapid flight; and the pelican, with his huge body and broad-webbed feet, fwam majeftically along, filling his capacious gullet with the fmall fry, which he fifhed for with folemn gravity. Having, with a few difcharges of my fufee, difperfed all thefe winged tribes to a diftance, I retired.

My tafte for new objects led me to avoid returning to the town by the way I had come. I knew that in the neighbourhood of Falfe, and hear Simon's Bay, there were barracks, where a detachment of troops from the garrifon was always ftationed. A poft fo diftant from the Cape is a kind of exile, during a great part of the year, to the men who are fent thither; and, for this reafon, care is taken every three months to relieve them.

At that time, the commandant of this dreary defert was an officer whom I had often had an opportunity of feeing at the houfe of Boers. I was therefore defirous of paying him a vifit, $\mathrm{K}_{2}$ and

 TRAVELS YNand of taking advantage of this occafion to ex amine at leifure the bottom of the Bay. He not only received me with cordiality, but, upon the pretext that it was neceflary to arrange the fmall collection of infects and birds which had been the fruit of my journey, preffed me to fpend a few days with him. Wihhing to vilit Cape Falfe, and the fhores oppofite the Bay, I accepted his invitation, and the next morning early a fifhing-boat that I met with conducted me thither. In traverfing this quarter, I beheld with aftonifhment thofe immenfe hills of thells and fand which, manifefly formed by the fea, afterwards ferved it as a fhore, and are at prefent at a confiderable diftance from it. Thefe undoubted monuments of its abode convinced me, that this fea penetrated formerly to what is now a part of the main land, and that it rofe there to a great height ; that it has fince very confiderably retired, and, confequently, that, it daily lofes ground, though it appears that it ought daily to gain, by the frequency of the ftorms, and the violence of the winds, which inceffantly drive it towards the coafts. After my return from this trip, I fpent two days more with the commandant. Six hours, at moft, were all that would be neceffary for me to return to the Cape by the ordinary route; but I contented myfelf with fending back the two negroes, that had been lent me, loaded with the various objects I had collected, and returned myfelf by the margin of the fea-hore, following the windings of the bays and creeks, beginning at the point of the nautili, and ending on the fide at the wefl.

This journey, notwithtanding is thort duration, was attended with fatigues which I had not forefeen. At every ftep, fome obftacle or other was fure to intervene. Here a projecting rock prefented itfelf, and there I was obliged to clamber a precipice with my Hottentot, affifting each other in turns, and continually expofing ourfelves to the rifk of flipping, and of being thereby precipitated into the abyfs below. At one time, a rapid declivity oppofed our defcent, and we had no refource but that of committing ourfelves to its mercy, by gliding down on our backs, in danger of being mangled and torn by our fall. At another, after much toil and labour, I found myfelf ftopped by fome creek or piece of water, which, forcing itfelf between two high rocks, blocked up my paf-fage, and obliged me to make long an dwearis fome turnings, the leaf inconvenience of which was a mortifying lofs of time.

My journey, however, was at length happily accomplifhed. But it is not here that I fhall give the refult of it. The excurfion which I made afterwards, as far as the tropic, enabled me to become acquainted with other circumftances of a fimilar nature, and to convince myfelf, that not only the fouthern point of Africa, but alfo its interior mountains at a great diftance within the land, have in part been covered by the fea. At fome future period I fhall publifh my remarks and reflections upon this fubject ; at prefent I fhall content myfelf. with obferving, that the ideas I have here fuggefted become fo evident, upon vifiting the coafts of the colony, that they have ftruck even the Hottentots themfelves; and it is probable that the Table, as well as the two neighbouring mountains, and all thofe which form the chain extending to the promontory, were formerly an ifland, feparated from the continent by an arm of the fea, which reached from Table to Falfe Bay, and formed a junction between them. It is hardly poffible to refufe to this conjecture the force of truth, when we furvey the low plain, and fee that it confifts of nothing but a mixture of fand and fhells half decompofed.

To this evident fact I fhall add another, which is, that this part of Africa, which I affirm, and with great reafon, to have been an ifland, has formed three very diftinct ones. I had a proof of this in croffing the chain of mountains of granite, of which I have before fpoken. I obferved there two long defiles, lying in a direction from eaft to weft, and which, it is probable, were formerly ftraits. That which ends at the bottom of Falfe Bay, is ftill covered with a fand-hill; the other terminates at. Baie-aux-Bois (woody bay.) To point them out to the reader, I have taken care to dot them in my chart. In fhort, being on different levels, it cannot be doubted that they were formed at different periods. However ancient may be that epoch, there is one ftill more remote; when the Table mountain itfelf, elevated as it is above the level of the ocean, feems neverthelefs to have been partly covered by its waters.

As to the natural hiftory of this part of $\mathrm{K}_{4}$ Africa

Africa which I travelled, I will freely confefs, that I had formed of it too extravagant an idea; for, of birds, I found no other kinds than are to be met with in abundance through the whole diftriat of Conftantia, Ronde-Bofch, and Nieuw-land; where they may be obtained with lefs trouble than on thofe lofty mountains, which arefo dififcult to be climbed. One alone feemed to prefer a habitation among thefe fteep rocks; which was a particular kind of woodpecker, of the fize of our green wood-pecker, and with a reddinh belly. Nature, who does not confine herfelf to general rules, and who takes pleafure in attending to the minuteft details, fporting with the fyftems of our methodical naturalins, has given to this red-bellied wood-peckus, habits the very reverfe of what are obfervable in all other birds that we know of the fame fpecies; for it never climbs trees, but perches itfelf, like other winged animals, upon the branches, and feeks its food in the earth, into which it forces its bill, and its long tongue, armed with a dart, to drag out its prey, in the fame manner as other wood-peckers do on worm-eaten trunks.

The only quadrupeds that inhabit thefe heights, heights, befide baboons, are the Kaim/z of the Hottentots, or Klip.fpringer of the Dutch planters, a fpecies of antelope, found oniy on the moft inacceffible rocks, and of which I finall fpeak elfewhere. In the low bottoms and valleys, and particularly upon the borders of sthe Imall rivulet that pours itfelf into Bare-oux-Bois, are found fome Grys-boc, and Duykers, two fpecies that I have formerly mentioned.

Every evening I heard the roaring of hyænas, but I never met with any of them in the courfe of the day. Once only I had a partial view of a panther, among the fand-hills in the neighbourhood of Falfe Bay. I faw alfo fome partridges of that large fpecies, very improperly called at the Cape, pheafants. Shrubs and plants are very numerous on the mountains; but of thefe enough has been already faid by Thumberg, Paterfon, and Sparmann.

Upon quitting the lodging I had occupied at the Cape, in the houfe of Boers, I accepted one from Colonel Gordon, though it was probable that my plans would fuffer me to remain in it only for a very fhort time.

Scarcely had I taken poffeffion of it, when I began top repare for my departure, and gave even fome orders refpecting my carriages and cattle : but the Colonel, who was acquainted with the country through which I was about to commence my journey, and who had travelled over a part of it, ftopped me in my career, by affuring me that, if I departed before the rainy feafon arrived, I fhould find only parched and barren deferts, where I fhould infallibly die of thirf, with my whole caravan.

This argument brought me to a determination; for it was impoffible not to yield to the advice of a prudent and enlightered man, who fpoke from experience. My confidence in him was fo great, that I never even thought of objecting to what he faid. He had travelled, indeed, to the north of the Cape, as I was preparing to do; but, as it was not my intention to purfue the fame route, the advice he gave was by no means applicable to me; as, in the end, I too fatally experienced. I caution future travellers, therefore, who fhall undertake a fimilar excurfion, not to follow my example, but to fet out from the Cape at the time of the intenfe heat, or, at leaft, fo to fettle their departure, that, during the fummer of the country, that is to fay, from November to February, they they may be in a higher latitude than that of the frontiers of the colony. I fhall particularife elfewhere my reafons for fpeaking in this manner, and the reader will fee in what miffortunes I was involved by undertaking this journey at an unfeafonable period.

It was then the month of January, and, agreeably to the advice of the Colonel, 1 was not to depart till May. By deferring it fo long, I could make my preparations at my leifure, with more care, and even with more economy: another advantage was, that it would enable me to complete, as far as poffible, a collection of the animals of the colony. My difafter in the bay of Saldanha had confiderably injured this project, and now that it was in my power to finifh it, I could not fuffer the opportunity to efcape.

Such of the Hottentots as I had retained in my fervice fince my firft journey, were at Groene-Kloof, employed in keeping and looking after my oxen. I paid a vifit to my herds and their guardians, and had reafon to be fatiffied with both. Remarking however that, among my cattle, there were three or four which had been too much fatigued by their former excurfion, to be able to endure a fecond, I parted with them. Colonel Gordon lent me four excellent oxen, which he had brought back with him from his expeclition, and I purchafed befides a new team that coft me a hundred and fixty-five rix dollars. With regard to my people, they all not only fhowed the greateft eagernefs to accompany me, but had infpired the fame ardour into fome of their comrades, whofe courage and fidelity they infured, and who had requefted them to beg that I would accept of their fervices. Could I forefee that fuch fair promifes would afterwards be belied?

At the Cape, I experienced marks of kindnefs from all quarters. The friends of Boers, become more particularly mine fince his departure, flrove who fhould be the firt to offer me fome prefent, either to add to my ftores, or to complete my equipage. The wife of the Colonel referved to herfelf the exclufive privilege of fupplying me with fugar, and other neceffary provifions for my table; while her hufband, military even in his gifts, begged me to accept of a new marquee, and the fervices of the armourer of his regiment to repair my fufees.
fufees. Van Genep, the poft captain, who had fucceeded Staaring, ordered me, from his ftores, a moft beautiful tent, in place of my own, which, from the continual rains I had experienced in the country of Auteniqua, had become unferviceable. Gilkin, the commandant of the artillery, and the officers of the garrifon, fent me a confiderable quantity of powder. In fhort, every perfon was defirous of giving me fomething; and, from the general zeal difplayed in my favour, one might have fuppofed that my journey was a public enterprife, to which all the inhabitants were bound to contribute according to their abilities.

I confidered myfelf as honoured by the fmalleft trifles, and made it my duty to accept them. Among the prefents of this kind I muft mention one in particular, which was given me by the Colonel, and accompanied with fome pleafantry. It confifted of three grenadier caps, on the gilt copper-plates of which, lower than thofe of the French, was reprefented the crowned lion that forms the arms of Holland. He was aware that thefe caps were highly gratifying to the favages, and would gain me the good will of the hordes whofe chiefs 1 fhould think proper to ornament with them.

I employed them for that purpofe; as will hereafter be feen, in different places in the interior of the country; and I have often regretted the want of objects equally rare to the favages, and which might have facifitated an intercourfe that it would be vain to attempt in any other way. In general, and it cannot be too often repeated ${ }_{3}$ it is only with toys, as one may fay, that the friendlhip of men in a ftate of nature is to be conciliated. I am filled with a mixed fentiment of contempt and indignation, when, in the accounts of travels among favages, I read hiftories of maffacres and wars; of which, without a blufh, men often avow themfelves the defenders, and whieh are exhibited to Europeans as acts of prowefs, deferving of renown, and worthy to be imitated. As for me; I have already faid, that my reafonings upon this fubject are very different : of this the reader will be more and more convinced, as he follows me in my travels. Experienced as I am at prefent, it would be eafy for me fo to conduct myfelf, as to avoid even the thought of an adventure that fhould coft the life of a fingle individual. It is in the name of humanity that I here exclaim againft the impudent pretenfions of thofe travellers, who would go to the diftance of four thoufand leagues from their native foil, to fubdue by the fword their fellow creatures, and make them adopt even their moft ridiculous follies. By nature, man is neither good nor bad; fociety alone can render him worthlefs. It requires no little addrefs and fincerity to diveft ourfelves all at once of our prejudices, and rife to a level with thofe whofe confidence and love it may be neceffary to gain.

I did not delay, till the moment of my departure, to provide myfelf with merchandife for barter, which might be ufeful to me in my route. Whenever a veffel had brought any trinkets to the Cape, I procured an affortment of them, and I had taken my precautions fo far back, as to be under no uneafinefs on that head. My provifion of lead, tobacco, glafsware, nails, and, above all, knives and tinderboxes, was ready ; and as my journey was to continue longer than the firft, I had doubled the quantity, intending fill to augment them fhould there be room in my waggons when 1 fet out.

My kitchen utenfils having been already fufficient for me, I did not think it neceffary to make any addition to them. I only exchanged a part of my porcelain for a few articles of the fame kind made of pewter. I fill remembered the accident that had happened to it, when the waggon that carried it was overturned in a river. Such conveniences are little of themfelves; but when cuftom has rendered them neceffary, we feel a degree of diffatisfaction at being reduced to a condition in which it is impoffible to procure them.

I ought alfo to mention here other articles no lefs effential, and of which I made ample provifion. I mean needles, pins, and tweezers, with a quantity of riband, and fome dozens of Indian handkerchiefs, particularly thofe of a red or blue colour. All thefe atticles, which the wives or daughters of the planters inceffantly afk from,travellers, are neceffary to gain their affections, and perhaps fomething more when an opportunity offers. I carried with me alfo, though very unfeafonably, a box filled with locks and padlocks, imagining that by thefe thefe I might render a fervice to fome of the inhabitants in the interior parts of the country: but what would have afforded me confiderable pleafure, in my firlt journey, became ufelefs in this; as I found no occafion of giving away a fingle lock, except to a planter of Nameroo, who accepted it, I believe, merely to oblige me, as I will freely confefs I was ignorant myfelf where he could fix it, there being only two openings in his houfe, of which one, that ferved as a door, was fhut, during the night only, with an ox's hide; and the other, ferving as a window, was clofed with the bottom of an old cafk. Laftly, knowing how much inuff was in requeft among the women, I provided myfelf with feveral pounds of it. However minute thefe details may appear, their probable utility to future travellers, who may undertake the fame expedition, leads me to confider it as an indifpenfable duty not to pafs them over in filence.

I had fẹnt for Swanepoel to town, to take care of my packages, and to confult him refpecting my ftores. His knowledge in thefe matters was likely to be of ufe to me; and indeed he reminded me of certain occurrences that, for want of the neceffary tools, had occafioned us very great embarraffments. To guard againft fimilar inconveniences, I appointed him infpector-general of all my preparations, charging him to make a good affortment of every thing likely to be ufeful, that we might be in want of nothing by the way. After difcharging the duties of his office, he repaired without delay to the horde of Klaas, to inform him of the day of my departure, and to appoint a rendezvous in Swart-Land, at the houfe of my friend Slaber, where I purpofed to affemble my whole caravan, and where one of my carriages had been previoufly fent a long time before.

Of the Hottentots who had accompanied me in my firft journey, there were only eight with whofe conduct I had been conftantly fatisfied. It was my wifh, therefore, to retain only thefe eight, and I gave them notice of my intention. In vain did the others come begging that I would accept of their fervices; I kept to my refolution, and rejected them. To fupply their place, Swanepoel, on his return, propofed to me fome intrepid fellows of his acquaintance, for whom he became anfwer- . able. Among them were two excellent markf-men, who he thought might be ufeful, and whom, indeed, I accepted without hefitation.

I had it in my power to have enlarged my company with feveral perfons more. As every one at the Cape knew that my firf journey had been fortunate, that no other accidents had happened to me than thofe which are unavoidable in fuch enterprifes; many planters and Europeans wifhed to be my affociates. I cannot repeat all the requefts that were made me on the fubject; but, faithful to my principles, and determined more than ever to remain perfectly free in my operations, I fuffered my refolution to be fhaken neither by perfonal confiderations, nor the moft preffing importunities ; and, under different pretences, foftened by politenefs and civility, I found means to difembarrafs myfelf of all my folicitors.

Among the number was one in particular of the name of Pinar, a keen fportfman, a great frequenter of the woods, and more efpecially celebrated for his dexterity in hunting elephants. This man, who by his great exploits in this way had acquired a certain celebrity in the colony, and of whom a hundred acts of $\mathbf{L} 2$ prowefs, prowefs, each more wonderful than another, were related, offered alfo to accompany me; and, by the air of confidence with which he prefented himfelf, feemed perfuaded that I ought to efteem myfelf happy in having with me a hero of fo extraordinary merit. I ventured, however, to thank him; and my readers may judge for themfelves whether I was wrong in refufing him, when I inform them that, having had the misfortune to meet him on my way, he had nearly occafioned the death of my old Swanepoel.

I was, however, tempted to make an exception in favour of a young furgeon, who was extremely preffing in his entreaties. The talents of a man of his profeffion might, in cafe of need, have become particularly ufeful both to me and my caravan. Befides, being obliged to have an intercourfe with the favage tribes among whom I was about to travel, I fhould have it in my power to adminifter to them affitance, by which I fhould increafe towards me their good-will and affection: nor could I reflect without pain on that unfortunate Gonaqua man, whom $I$ had feen in his hut, abandoned to the mof dreadful torture, without my being able, from my ignorance of medicine, to relieve his fufferings.

On the other hand, I bad to fear that the dangers and fatigue of the journey would be too great for the courage of my Efculapius. And what was I to have done, hhould that be the cafe? I muft have returned the fame way I came, till I arrived at the colony, in order to leave him in a place of fafety; for I certainly thould not have abandoned him to himfelf in the midtt of the deferts,

In this perplexity, I was flruck with an idea that appeared to remedy the inconvenience, and preferve to each his perfonal independence. This was, to have a feparate carriage and eftablifhment for him, in order that, fhould he be difpofed to return, he might do fo freely, without interfering with orimpeding my progrefs. An arrangement like this would have placed us both equally at our eafe. I propofed it to him, adding, that my confent to his accompanying me would entirely depend upon it: but it was not accepted, and I difmiffed it from my thoughts.

Among my acquaintance at the Cape, there were fome who would fain have diffuaded me from my plan, affigning as a reafon the pretended character of the African tribes, whom they reprefented as ferocious monfters and cannibals, among whom I fhould foon be infallibly deftroyed. But, flattering myfelf that I knew man in a ftate of nature better than thefe fine talkers, whofe fuperficial knowledge had been derived from books deftitute of truth, I had no dread of the danger that was announced to me. I have had opportunities of fudying human nature in its uncivilized ftate; every where it has appeared to me to be good; every where I have feen it alfo, when not irritated and treated with injuftice, to be hofpitable and friendly ; and I here affirm, from the conviction of my heart, that in thofe pretended barbarous countries, where the whites have not yet rendered themfelves odious, becaufe they have never been there, it would have been fufficient for me to hold out my hand in token of friendfhip, to make the Africans prefs it with affection in theirs, and receive me as their brother. If I wifhed to obtain any fervices from them, or to barter with them, I had in my brandy, my toys, and my tobacco, very advantageous means of commerce. What black is there who would not, with tranfports of joy, have yielded up to me every thing he had, for goods in the poffeffron of which he would have found the moft neceffary objects, and the moft delicious gratifications with which he was acquainted? I repeat it then, If I have been thwarted in my projects, they are not men, but the feafons that I accufe; the feafons, whofe unfriendly oppofition I began to experience from the moment of my departure.

At every time of the year the roads of the Cape are bad: and, if fuch be their ordinary ftate, judge what they mult be when the rainy feafon commences. Scarcely had I proceeded a quarter of a mile from the town, when one of my carriages was dragged into a hole, and overturned in the mud; nor was it poffible for my ten oxen that drew it, nor the exertions of my Hottentots, to ftop its fall

In an inftant the accident was known at the Cape, and I was foon joined by a crowd of the inhabitants, fome attracted by mere curiofity, and others by a defire of being ufeful. I had, in reality, need of affiftance to place the carriage on its wheels again; for it was not poffible to raife it without unloading it, and the boxes were fo large and fo heavy, that they could no be taken out and replaced without a multitude of hands. It was neceffary even to empty: them on the fpot. Every one lent his aid; and, as my effects were taken out, they were depofited round my carriages in fuch places as were freeft from mud. In a little time, the whole furrounding fpace was covered with them, and every thing I poffeffed, expofed thereby to the view of the company. At length, my whole cargo was again put in order, and I purfued my courfe ; but not without many diftreffing reflections on the part of the fpectators; who, from fo unfortunate a beginning, augured no good of my journey.

Their predictions were but too true; and I had foon reafon to apprehend a full accomplifhment of them, by a fecond misfortune which I experienced.

The accident which happened to my carriage had confumed almoft the whole day. It was half paft three in the afternoon before I could proceed; the days were the fhorteft in the year, and, if my carriages travelled in the night, accidents ftill more difaftrous might take place. To prevent this, I refolved to fop towards the clofe of the day, and I caufed my cattle to be unyoked in Groene-Valey (green lake), about two hundred yards from a plantation.

I obferve, in all the maps of Africa, and all the accounts of the Cape of Good Hope, that the Dutch word valey is tranflated valley. The word valey, however, fignifies a lake or marfh, and not a valley, which in Dutch is klorf.

This was a manor plantation that belonged to the governor. His baas, or overfeer, faw me arrive, and, while my oxen were unyoking, he ftood quietly at his door; but no fooner were they let loofe, than he gave orders to the Hottentots and negroes under his command, to feize them and convey them to the farm. At that moment I had juft caufed a fire to be lighted. Surprifed at the conduct of the flaves, I went up to the overfeer, and defired him to explain it. He replied, that there were particular orders from government, which forbade any planter to unyoke and turn cattle adrift within his mafter's domains, and that, in confequence of doing fo, all my oxen were confifcated. Exceldent logic for a knave devoid of all principle!

I was not a planter, and therefore the regulation could in no manner affect me. As a ftranger, I was pardonable for not knowing it; and befides this privilege of a flranger and a traveller, I had, from the governor himfelf, particular letters, in which he enjoined all the inhabitants of the colony, not only to avoid throwing the leaft impediment in the way of my journey, and to allow me a free paffage wherever my curiofity might lead me, but alfo to give me, by authority of government, every affiftance I might have occafion for. All this I reprefented to the overfeer. I obferved to him alfo, that, when my oxen were feized, they were in the downs, and confequently beyond the privileged boundaries of the domain. In fhort, I complained to him of the uncandid manner in which he had behaved towards me, fince, inftead of giving me notice when he faw me unyoke, he contented himfelf with being a filent fpectator, as if highly gratified by feeing me fall into an error.

To thefe remonftrances he made no other reply, than that he had a right to confifcate my cattle: and in truth the capture would have been of fome worth to him. Tired of his iniquitous iniquitous morality, I affumed another tone, and, with all the energy that an honeft man is capable of difplaying when leated by paffion, I gave him to underftand what a rafcal I thought him. To this he made no anfwer ; but ordered his flaves to collect all my oxen, and conduct them to another plantation of the governor's, a league diftant. I could then no longer contain my indignation; and clapping my double-barrelled fufee to my fhoulder, I declared aloud, that if any man dared fo much as to touch one of my animals, I would immediately blow out his brains.

This threat had the defired effect. The baas and his flaves, equally intimidated, remained quiet, without daring to ftir. In this attitude I left them; and, while they fcarcely ventured to move, I ordered my writing-box to be brought, that I might inform the fifcal of what had happened, telling Swanepoel at the fame time, to take one of my horfes and proceed to the Cape with my letter. Upon hearing the word fifcal, the overfeer began to tremble: he was afraid that, fhould my complaint reach his mafter, he might be deprived $\rho f$ his place. He begged me, therefore, to countermand the departure of Swanepoel; ordered his people to fet my cattle at liberty ; and apologized in the moft fuppliant manner for his conduct, throwing the blame on the feverity of the orders he had received.

What the knave faid of thefe orders was perhaps true; for, if there are fervants of the greateft meannefs, there are alfo mafters of the moft fordid avarice. This confideration prevented me from feeking to punifh the overfeer ; and, after all, when my oxen were reftored, what more had I to defire ?

As I could not, however, perfectly depend on the motives which had dictated this man's excufes, I thought it right to be on my guard refpecting my cattle. To turn them loofe to feed during the night would have been running the rifk, fhould the overfeer alter his refolution, of having them carried off without my knowledge : or he would have charged to my account, and perhaps have exaggerated, any damage they might have occafioned, I ordered them, therefore, to be all made faft round my carriages, and I placed at hand fome armed fentinels to defend them.

Next morning, at break of day, I proceeded on my route towards Groene-Kloof (green valley), a cantun fo named from the beauty and excellence of its paftures. It is one of the Company's pofts, where they fatten cattle for fupplying the butchers in the town, and for victualling fhips in their way to and from India. The day following, after paffing through Bavians-Berg and Daffen-Berg, I enteredSwartLand. Though the roads were ftill equally bad, they ceafed to be dangerous to my carriages, becaufe we travelled upon fand. Affured that there was no longer reafon to fear their being overturned, and out of patience at the flow pace they advanced, I put fpurs to my horfe, and took the lead, in order to arrive before them at the houfe of my friend Slaber.

He was ill, and very much weakened by a. violent dyfentery; a difeafe that in warm countries is always dangerous, but particularly fo to perfons advanced in years. I threw myfelf into his arms; he preffed me in his; and by the pleafure that fparkled in his countenance, 1 faw that my prefence reftored, in fome meafure, his ftrength, and alleviated his pains. Thefe fymptoms of convalefeence communicated delight to the whole family, and increafed the pleafure they feemed to experience at feeing me again. In the midft of their kindnefs and careffes, Klaas came alfo to pay his refpects to me. I had appointed him a meeting at the houfe of Slaber, where he had arrived the evening before with fome Hottentots, his comrades, trufty perfons, whom he had felected to accompany me, and whom he accordingly introduced. The daughters of Slaber thanked me, with the tendereft affection, for the relief I had afforded to the fufferings of their father, and, to complete his cure, they befought me to fpend fome time with him. In vain did I reprefent the embarraffment into which they would be thrown by the numerous train that followed me: they redoubled their entreaties, and urged me with fuch terms of friendhip, that I was obliged at length to comply. How, indeed, could I refift thefe charming daughters, who, foliciting in behalf of their father, afked, as a favour, what I ought to have confidered as a kindnefs to myfelf?

At the Cape, the European manners have introduced into fociety the different games that are common in Europe: but thefe games are unknown in the colonics, notwithftanding the inactive life and habitual idlenefs of the inhabitants. Neither cards nor dice are any where feen; their fole amufement is the chace; and this, in general, they purfue with indolence, unlefs they have, as fpectators and companions, ftrangers who are keener fportfmen than themfelves.

I was, therefore, treated with the chace. All the fhooters of the neighbourhood wereinvited, and for feveral days together we ranfacked the whole country around. Slaber's daughters, in the mean time, were not unmindful of their gueft ; and never, even at the court of Alcinous, was a ftranger the object of greater affiduity or more affectionate care. They exerted their fkill in paftry, and prepared for me cakes, bifcuits, and confectionary, to add to my ftock of provifions: delicate morfels, which I ought to have referved for moments of famine, but which, after the manner of children, I was impatient to devour and fhare with my people.

Thefe hunting excurfions prepared me for fatigues of a longer duration, and I imagined myfelf already engaged in them. I had not neglected to arrange my caravan. To accuftom it early to the fevere difcipline that I wifhed if poffible, to obferve in this journey, I had encamped it at a diftance from the houfe, and placed it under the infpection of old Swanepoel. I recommended to him to difcharge his office with the utmoft ftrictnefs, as if we had to dread fome hoftile neighbour. I did not fail to obferve it myfelf with the eye of a mafter; and I watched, with particular attention, the new comers that had been procured by Swanepoel: I was continually afraid I fhould have caufe to complain of thefe men, and that their ardour might cool before I had an opportunity of putting it to the trial. It appeared of importance to me, to bring even my oxen and horfes to the habits they were heres after to follow, and for that reafon they were removed to the camp: my goats alfo were tied up every evening round my carriages. The much-loved family of Slaber were highly delighted with this fpectacle, which was per= fectly new to them; and the girls, particularly, often propofed to travel and encamp with me. One of them rallied me more obftinately than the reft, and repeated, that nothing ought to excufe my taking with me a female companion: Senfible the was far from being in earneft, I ftrenuoufly refifted all the could urge on this head, and with great gravity refufed the offers of one who certainly intended the boundaries of her father's farm to be the limits of her excurfion. However, it is not without fome vexation and regret that I now feel this happinefs was wanting to render the enjoyments of my peregrination complete; and that nothing was more eafy than to have departed, fhared the toils of the journey, returned, and, in a word, lived with me.

Though it was now the middle of winter according to the ideas of the inhabitants, that is to fay, the rainy feafon, we neverthelefs enjoyed for our hunting excurfions very favourable weather, the rain not being fo frequent at this period in the mountains as at the Cape. This muft be afcribed to the collection of clouds driven from the north towards the Table mounitain, and which never fail to break over the town and its environs. We refided under a mild climate, and every day was more delightful than the preceding one. Thofe terrible fouth-eaft winds, which often defolate the whole country around, had fled from our atVol. I.

mofphere. The heavens were pure and ferene; and I delicioufly abandoned myfelf to the enjoyments of this fecond Capua. I became folitary and thoughtful. At the fame time I regretted to fee fo many charming days no better occupied than in killing infignificant game, and was refolved to arrange matters for my departure ; but an unexpected incident intervened fill for a fhort time to delay it.

Nothing could be farther from my thoughts at that moment than that unfortunate veffel the Middelburg, in which I had formerly loft my whole property, when it was fuddenly brought to my recollection by une of Slaber's fons, who came to tell me, that fome neighbours, having examined the remains of the wreck in Saldanha Bay, had diftinctly perceived the hull of the veffel, at the depth of twenty feet under water; that curiofity, and the allurement of the riches it might contain, had induced fome of them, who were expert divers, to plunge into the gulph, and that their labour and fearch had not been fruitlefs. Several of them', he faid, had brought up fome valuable pieces of china; and that, fince, new divers, divers, emboldened by their example, had hazarded a fimilar fub-aqueous pilgrimage, and endeavoured to found the fides of this ill-fated veffel. It was natural for me, who had loft in it the only treafures on which my hopes were founded, to put in a claim upon this occafion; and if by my efforts I obtained only a piece of a rope, or fome wretched and broken fherds, they would have appeared to me precious relics, worthy of being carried away and preferved in remembrance of my misfortune.

The cargo of the veffel had confifted chiefly of porcelain from China and Japan. Other planters, as I have faid, in imitation of the firft, had gone to fearch the wreck, and had been equally fuccefsful; but the bufinefs, becoming at laft too arduous, had been abandoned. I was refolved, however, to revive the attempt. The calmnefs of the weather appeared to be favourable to the enterprife, and I was the more eager to engage in it, from the opportunity it would afford me, if I fucceeded, of prefenting fome elegant porcelain to my fair hofteffes, as well as to fome of their neighbours, by whom, during my vifits to Slaber,

164 TR.A.VELSIN

I had been treated with great kindnefs" and friendfhip.

Accordingly, taking with me a party of my people and fome good fwimmers, I fet out for Hoetjos Bay, a fmall creek into which our fhip* had retired when attacked by the Englifh fquadron. I found the Middelburg, as it had. been defcribed to me, very near the flore, about twenty feet under water, and its hull, from the calmnefs of the fea, perfectly perceptible.

This calmnefs aided the operations of my divers, and they entered upon the bufinefs with, fo muel alacrity that it was not long before they brought up a number of loofe articles, which I depofited with great joy on the fhore. With fuch prizes, however, they were not fatiffied; though the tafk was fo difficult, as the planters had experienced, that frequently, before they fucceeded in an attempt; they were obliged to return feveral times to the furface of the water to breathe.

At the bottom of the fhip there were whole boxes; but they were too heavy for the excrtions of a fingle individual to lifts Meanwhile while it would be highly gratifying to them to procure me one; and to accomplifh it, they devifed the plan of diving two at a time, holding one another by the hand, in order to labour together on the fame box, and raife it, if porfible, by their joint efforts, one on each fide. The manœeurre fucceeded; and I faw them thortly appear with a complete box, which was brought in fafety-to the fhore.

Charmed with my treafure, and anxious to know what it contained, I caufed it to be opened ; when I found, to my extreme fatiffaction, a handfome fervice of difhes and plates of all fizes, well afforted. Other divers had furnifhed me with tea-cups, and fome magnificent bowls, equally valuable for the beauty of their fhape and their extraordinary fize. But by remaining fo long under water the colour of this china was fo much altered, that the part originally white appeared as if variegated with a tint of green; and what was fill worfe, it had contracted, from the fame caufe, fo naufeous and fetid a marine fmell, that thofe of my people who had opened the box, or affifted in emptying it, were, as well as myfelf, feized with a vomiting. From this circumftance I $\mathrm{M}_{3}$ loft loft all defire of purfuing any further my refearches. Befides, night was approaching: my people therefore, after wafhing the china, each took up his burden, and we returned.

Flattering myfelf that this frange fmell had not penetrated beyond the furface, my firft care, on my arrival at the plantation, was to afcertain this by caufing fome cups and other articles to be immerfed for a while in boiling water mixed with afhes. - I then wiped the veffels thus lixiviated, and put fome tea in a tea-cup, fome victuals in a difh, and fome milk in a bowl ; but they inftantly acquired fo deteftable a tafte, and fo ftercoraceous a favour, as induced me to believe that all my labour would prove to be fruitlefs. In vain were other means tried to deftroy this odour and tafte : none of them fucceeded, and I gave up the attempt.

In my difpleafure I had forgotten the bowl of milk; and upon my going to fee it, two hours after, I faw with aftonifhment that it was turned to a curd. It was to be prefumed that every other article of the china would have the fame quality. I tried two others, and examined by my watch what time they would require to produce a fimilar effect. In fourteen minutes the milk was curdled, and, what was remarkable, it had no bad tafte. This fact fupplied me with as ufeful hint. It told me, that in the courfe of my journey I might fpeedily and whenever I pleafed have new cheefe; and the difcovery was of too much importance to me not to take advantage of it. During my firft excurfion a fortunate incident of a like kind had fupplied me with butter, my milk having been changed into that fubftance merely by the jolting of my carriage. From my cows and my fhe-goats I fhould now be able to procure, without difficulty, butter, cheefe, and whey. I carried with me, therefore, four of the bowls, which ferved me during my whole journey. They did not, indeed, retain their virtue in its full force; after four or five months it diminifhed, and the milk was curdled more flowly; there were times even, according to the degrees of temperature, when the effect was not produced in lefs than five or fix hours; but it was fure to take place, and did not entirely ceafe till the end of fix or feven months. The veffels, however, never loft their difagreeable marine tafte.

Previounly to my quitting the Cape, I had prepared feveral letters for my family, in which I informed them of my intended fecond expedition, and the means I had devifed for carrying it into effect, It was not poffible to tell them the precife route I fhould follow, becaufe I was ignorant of it myfelf, as it would depend entirely upon local circumftances, which might happen to favour or thwart my wifhes. I merely faid, that my plan in general was to crofs, from fouth to north, the whole continent of Africa, and then to return to Europe by the way of Egypt if the paffage of the Nile was open, and if not, by the coafts of Barbary; that this enterprife, from the beft calculations I could make, would require fix years; and that as, during that period, no opportunity might offer for writing to them, they ought not to be alarmed at my filence.

Thefe letters I had refolved not to fend till it Thould appear that no farther obftacles would ftand in the way of my journey, When fure of this, I immediately difpatched Swanepoel to the Cape with them, requefting Colonel Gordon to forward them to their place of deftination by the firft neutral veffel that fhould fail.

On his return, Swanepoel brought me one from
from the Colonel, in which, as a new teftimony of zeal and attachment, he had fketched out, point by point, the courfe I ought to purfue. Having himfelf made the fame expedition with Lieutenant Paterfon, he knew the places where water was to be found, and he obligingly pointed them out. Not content with this fervice, great and important as it was, he fought to render me another, by procuring me the acquaintance of two perfonages, extremely defirable in an excurfion like mine; the one a planter, of the name of Schoenmaker, who lived after the Hottentot manner among the favages; the other a mulatto Hottentot, who fpoke with fluency the Nimiqua language, and who would, on that account, be fingularly ufeful, if I could prevail on him to accompany me, To each of thefe men Colonel Gordon wrote a feparate letter recommending me to their care, and he fent them to me unfealed, begging I would read them to the parties. It could indeed be no eafy tafk to find in their deferts two fuch wandering and unfettled beings; but fo minute were the Colonel's directions, and fo laborioully had he pointed out the means of tracking them, as I may fay, that, arrived in their cantons, I fucceeded, though not without difficulty, in my fearch.
How ingenious are the devices of friendfhip! And can I ever fufficiently acknowledge my obligations to that of Colonel Gordon in this inftance, to which I owe not only my own life, but the lives of all my people? It was in the midft of a dry and burning defert, when obliged to abandon my waggons and effects, after feeing all my oxen, one after another, perifh with thirf, when reduced, with my poor comrades, to thedeftitute fituation of having no other drink than the milk of my goats, and when inevitable death feemed to await alike both them and me-it was in this extremity I called to mind the planter and Hottentot to whom his provident kindnefs had recommended me. Guided by his inftructions, I entered upon the purfuit of thefe men; I found them, and we were faved. But let me not anticipate moments of anguifh, of which the recollection will be fufficiently bitter when I come to defcribe them.

What reafon had I then to applaud myfelf for the precaution I took, and which doubtlefs fome good genius fuggefted to me, of increaf.
ing, while at the houfe of Slaber, the number of my goats! I purchafed feveral in the neighbourhood, and particularly young ones, which, though they afforded no milk as yet, would foon become more exuberant than their mothers. I added alfo to my ftock of cattle three milch cows. Among the articles too of domeftic confumption, I provided myfelf with a few facks of flower: not that I flattered my felf during my journey to be fupplied thereby with frefh bread; fuch an expectation would have been madnefs; but it would be poffible at leaft to have foups, paftry, and cakes; and thefe would be a fort of fubflitute. Every habit to which we accuftom ourfelves becomes infenfibly a want. This I had particularly experienced in the beginning of my firf journey. To be, all at once totally without bread had been extremely painful to me; and I hoped now, by means of this flower, gradually to wean myfelf from the cuftom, in order to be prepared againft a day of neceffity. Befides, if circumftances proved favourable to the making of bread, I had the wife of Klaas, who might render me this fervice. She had accompanied him in our excurfion, with the hope that, paffing near the country where he had firt met with her, I fhould procure her an opportunity of feeing again her horde and her friends. In the eyes of a cit, this love of country, in favages whom he difdains, and whofe exiftence appears to him a fcene of uniform wretchednefs, will doubtlefs be regarded as improbable. He swill conceive that there can be no happinefs but in towns, and none of this patriotifm except in places where there are to be obtained what he calls the conveniences of life, that is, the gratification of wants which he has created himfelf, and which afterwards become neceffaries.

I had fixed the Igth of June for my departure from the habitation of Slaber. On the $14^{\text {th }} \mathrm{I}$ made a general mufter of my equipage and my people. Including the wife of Klaas, and my infpector-general Swanepoel, I had altogether nineteen perfons, thirteen dogs in high condition, one male and ten female goats, three horfes, of which two, handfomely caparifoned, were thofe given me'by Boers ; three milch cows, thirty-fix draft oxen for my three waggons, fourteen for relays, and two to carry the baggage of my Hottentots. Thefe fifty fifty head of horned cattle were fufficient for the prefent fervice ; but I meant to increafe them as it Chould become neceffary, and as I advanced farther from the colony, where, in the way of barter, I fhould be able to purchafe them at a cheaper rate. The cock that, in my fort journey, had afforded me intervals of pleafure, fuggefted the idea of having one again, and, that it might be happier than my other had been, I gave it a mate. Laftly, for my amufement, and, I may alfo fay, for fociety, I took my ape Kees; Kees who, chained upduring my abode at the Cape, had apparently lof his gaiety, but who from the moment he regained his liberty gave himfelf up to fports and anticks that were extremely diverting.

Such was the company I affociated in my enterprife, and which I had conceived to be. neceffary, either to infure its fuccefs, or for the purpofe of affording me fome pleafant relaxations.

Next morning every thing was ready for my departure, according to the orders I had given, and my people were waiting only for my fignal to begin their march. Whilf I was bidding a painful adieu to the Slabers, and while while my heart fwelled with affectionate gratitude, I a thoufand and a thoufand times embraced the kind family, who till that moment had continued to load me with marks of friendhip and care, and from whom I thought myfelf about to be feparated for ever. When on the very point of quitting them, the young men of the neighbourhood prefented themfelves to take leave of me, and to affitt at my departure. Such is the etiquette of the country, when the inhabitants wifh to teflify their refpect for thofe whom they efteem. The whole troop faluted me with a difcharge of mufketry; and I, who expected fuch a teftimony of politenefs, returned it by another from my Hettentots. When I mounted my horfe, thefe young people accompanied me on horfeback alfo to the diftance of above a league. At length, being obliged to feparate, and having mutually fhaken hands, I was again faluted by a general difcharge, to which I replied by firing my own piece, and caufing my people to fire theirs. To fpeak the truth, I regretted the lofs of my' gun-powder wafted in this manner to no purpofe; but cuftom required this facrifice, and I could not avoid it without a breach of politenefs, and without offending men who voluntarily conferred upon me the greateft honour which the prejudices of their country allow them to pay. Some of the planters in the neighbourhoad of the Cape keep fmall cannon on purpofe for fuch falutes.

In the fouthern part of Africa it is eafy to make long marches during the fine days of fummer, that is to fay in January, when the day confifts of fourteen hours; but at the folftice in June, when the fun is in the northern hemifphere, the days being only nine hours and a half, the length of the night will not allow a traveller to advance as faft as he might wifh. Such was nearly the period at which I fet out. Befides, being obliged to traverfe the colony, I had reafon to expect that I fhould be every where retarded by the importunity and politenefs of the planters; and indeed this was the cafe the very firft day. I had propofed to encamp near the refidence of Louis Karften; but that worthy and refpectable planter, of whom I have had occafion to fpeak in my firft journey, and at whofe houfe I paffed fome agreeable moments during my ftay at Saldanha Bay, feconded by his wife and eight children, among whom were four handfome daughters, came; with the ufual falutes, to invite me to pafs the night under his roof; and I could not refufe. However, in my next day's journey, to fave both my time and my powdet; I firmly rejected every folicitation of this kind, and pitched my tent for the firft time; but as there had been a heavy fall of rain, and as, if it continued, I might be ftopped by the overflowing of the Berg-rivier, I haftened to encamp the fecond day on its banks, and the day following I happily left it behind me.

This river, which has its mouth in St. Helen's Bay, but according to Kolben much higher up, bounds, on the eaft and north, the diftrict called Swart-Land (black-country), though the foil is far from being of that colour; on the contrary, it is fandy, and yet produces grain of all forts except oats, which grow no where in the colonies, and in place of which barley is fubftituted for horfes. In Swart-Land, thefe animals have no other food with their barley but chopped ftraw. In fummer, therefore, when grafs is fcarce, on account of the rivers and ftreams being dried up, the planters are obliged to remove their cattle to diftricts lefs parched, and to keep at home only thofe abfolutely neceffary either for tilling the land or conveying their corn to the town.

Every kind of large game, without excepting even the elephant, was found formerly in this country. At prefent nothing of that fort is to be feen but a few bubels, and very rarely fome pafans. The planters, by fettling here, have deftroyed or driven away all the reft. With regard to fmall game, fuch as the fteen-bock, the duyker, the grys-bock, hares, partridges, &c. it is ftill very abundant, and, perhaps, too much fo for the happinefs of the country; fince it draws thither hyænas, jackals, leopards, panthers, and above all, wild dogs, which are a real fcourge to the flocks in this diftrict. The lion feldom makes his appearance here. Either from haughtinefs or prudence this animal fhuns in-habited places; as if afraid of expofing himfelf in an unequal conteft, where his courage and his frength would be oppofed by firearms.

To the north-eaft of Swart-Land is the charming and fertile diftrict of the Twenty-four-Rivers. With frefh pleafure I beheld this Vol. I.
terreftrial paradife of Southern Africa; tholé fmiling plains which I have elfewhere defcribed; and thofe odoriferous groves of orange and fhaddock trees, which feparate the habitations from each other, and which make us regret that they are thereby too frequently broken and difcontinued.

Though determined, agreeably to the refolation I had formed, not to ftop at the houfe of any planter, I could not however difpenfe with paying my refpects, as I paffed, to Hans Liewenburg, a rich land-holder, who on various occafions had treated me with confiderable kindnefs and efteem, and with whom I had lodged in mypreceding excurfion through this diftrict. Though Liewenburg, as well as his neighbours, employed the moft preffing folicitations to detain me, I refifted a long time; but it was impoffible not to comply, when one of his fons, uniting his entreaties to thofe of his father, promifed to afford me an opportunity of killing two magnificent birds, which were continually feen near the plantation. At firt, this vague promife appeared to me to be only one of thofe ingenious ftratagems which politenefs fometimes allows itfelf to employ. I put therefore feveral queftions to the young man, begging him to defcribe the birds in queftion; and he did it in a manner fo clear and fo natural, that I readily diftinguifhed in the defcription the anhinga, an uncommon bird which I had not yet feen in Africa.

This difcovery attacked me, fo to fpeak, on my weakeft fide. From that moment I was not at liberty to refufe; and I granted, to my thame be it fpoken, to two birds, which I was not yet fure of getting, what I had refufed to the folicitations of friendfhip.

Next morning I reminded my young man of his promife, and he conducted me towards a tree that was commonly frequented by thefe birds. I foon found that I had not been deceived in my conjectures; I actually perceived two anhingas, but of a particular fpecies, different from the two peculiar to America, and from that of Senegal, defcribed by Buffon. The young man, who had for a long time obferved their habits, told me that it would be neceffary for me to retire, if I wifhed to take a fure and advantageous aim. He conducted me, therefore, to a diftance of about two or three hundred paces from the tree; made me conceal myfelf, and returned to the fpot himfelf, to put them to flight, when, he affured me, they would undoubtedly pafs over my head. His conjecture was, however, not verified: thefe birds, more cunning than we, had perceived our ftratagem; and feeing but one perfon, inftead of two, they fufpected that the abfence of the other was to be dreaded, and accordingly flew off in a different direction. By fearching the environs, it would probably have been eafy for me to find them again; but then I fhould have run the rifk of rendering them more fhy, and of making them, perhaps, defert the country. Befides, I was not willing to fire at the one, till I fhould be certain that my fecond fhot would bring down the other. I deferred the excurfion, therefore, till after dinner, and we returned to the houfe.

In the evening, juft before fun-fet, I again repaired to my lurking-place; and that I might not be obferved by the anhingas, I went thither direcily, while young Liewenburg, on his part, proceeded alone to the tree. This time the deception fucceeded: the two birds, having no caufe of fufpicion, paffed me at the diftance of twenty paces, and by means of my double-barrelled fufee I brought them both to the ground.

Become poffeffor of an object fo valuable in my eyes, could I quit abruptly, after I had obtained it, the complaifant hofts to whom I was indebted for it? No:-gratitude, friendfhip, and even decency, required that I fhould remain fome days with them, and I obeyed the dictates of thefe fentiments.

Though I referve for my ornithology the particular defcription of thefe birds, I cannot refrain from giving the reader a fhort fketch of it. The denomination of Slange-Hals-Voogel, (fnake-necked bird), which my Hottentots gave to the anhinga, characterifes it in a very fimple and accurate manner. Buffon, who was equally ftruck with the conformation peculiar to birds of this kind, has delineated them by a fimilar expreffion. "The anhinga," fays he, " exhibits a reptile grafted on the body of " a bird." Indeed there is no perfon, who, upon feeing the head and neck only of an anhinga, while the reft of the body is hid among the foliage of the tree on which it is perched, would not take it for one of thofe ferpents accuftomed to climb and refide in trees; and the miftake is fo much the eafier, as all its tortuous motions fingularly favour the illufion.

In whatever fituation the anhinga may be feen, whether perched on a tree, fwimming in the water, or flying in the air, the moft apparent and remarkable part of its body is fure to be its long and flender neck, which is continually agitated by an ofcillatory motion, unlefs in its flight, when it becomes immoveable and extended, and forms with its tail a perfectly ftraight and horizontal line.

The true place which nature feems to have affigned to the anhingas, in the numerous clafs of the palmipedes, is exactly between the cormorant and the grebe *. They partake indeed equally of both thefe genera of birds, having the ftraight flender bill and the long neck of the latter; while they approach the former by the conformity of their feet, the four toes of which are joined by a fingle membrane. They partake alfo of the cormorant by their flight;

[^2]having like it the wings larger and fitter for the purpofe, than thofe of the grebe, which are fhort and weak. The tail of the anhingas is extremely long : a characterific very fingular and remarkable in a water fowl, and which ought, it would feem, to render them totally diftinct from diving birds, which, in general, have little or no tail.

By this trait, they approach fill nearer to the cormorants*; for though the tails of the latter are fhorter, the tails of both have a great refemblance to each other, fince their quills are equally ftrong, elaftic, and proper to form a rudder when thefe fowls fwim through the water in purfuit of fifh, which conftitute their principal nourifhment. When the anhinga feizes a fifh, he fwallows it intire if it be fmall enough, and if too large he carries it off to a rock, or the ftump of a tree, and, fixing it under one of his feet, tears it to pieces with his bill.

Though water is the favourite element of this bird, it builds its neft and rears its young on rocks and trees; but it takes great care to place them in fuch a manner that it can precipitate them into a river as foon as they are able to fivim, or the fafety of the little family may require it.

There are, in general, few animals fo fierce and fo cunning as diving birds; but, in my opinion, the one I am defcribing furpaffes in fagacity all the other feecies, particularly when furprifed fwimming ; for it is then very difficult, I may fay indeed impoffible, to kill it, as its head, which is the only part expofed, plunges and difappears the inftant the flint touches the hammer of the fufee; and if once miffed, it is in vain to think of approaching it a fecond time, as it never fhows itfelf more, but at very great diftances, and then only for the moment neceffary for breathing. In fhort, fo cunning is it, that it will often baffle the fportfman, by plunging at the diftance of a hundred paces above him, and rifing again to breathe at the diftance of more than a thoufand paces below him ; and if it has the good fortune to find any reeds, it conceals itielf there, and entirely difappears.

The male anhinga, of which I here fpeak, differs from the female, which is fmaller, in having the whole under part of the body, from the breaft to the root of the tail, of a beautiful black, while the latter has the fame parts of a yellow ifabella colour.' It has alfo, on each fide of its neck, a white ftripe, which extends from the eye to the middle of its length, and interfects a reddilh ground. A very fingular characteriftic, common to all the anhingas, is that of having the feathers of the tail deeply ftriated, and as it were ribbed. I fhall pafs over other fingularities, which will be found in my general defcriptions.

During the time I refided at the houfe of Liewenburg, I chiefly employed myfelf in again traverfing every part of the diftrict. The family, according to the cuftom of the country, exerted themfelves to procure me opportunities of enjoying the pleafures of the chace; and, in conformity with the fame cuftom, the neighbours were invited to join in them. We killed a great quantity of fmall game, particularly wood-cocks, which are very numerous on account of the abundance of rivers that every where form fmall marfhes; and we wandered over thofe high mountains which are the boundaries daries of this delightful country. The fides of thefe mountains are covered with large trees, and among thefe we fell in with a panther, which my dogs roufed from its den among the rocks. In an inftant, and at one leap, it fprang to the top of a tree, twenty feet in height above them; and as the briars and fallen trunks which lay extended on the ground retarded the quicknefs of my pace, I could not get within reach of it time enough to fire, which afforded it an opportunity of efcaping from tree to tree, as faft as it could have done on an open plain. Befides the antelopes of which I have fpoken, we found in the canton of the Twenty-four Rivers a number of zebras, pafans, bubels, and oftriches, which mult be hunted on horfeback; but the ground is fo covered with buhhes, and fo encuinbered by the arched nefts built there by the termites, or white ants, that it is very dangerous to purfue them full fpeed, as the velocity of thefe animals requires.

Naturalifts have for fome time paft made us acquainted with this fpecies of ants, which, adwancing under ground like miners, conftruct for themfelves, at certain diftances, a fort of dome dome or arch feveral feet in height. Smearhman communicated many years ago to the Royal Society of London a very minute defcription of them, a tranflation of which has been inferted in the French edition of Sparman's Travels by the editor. In this account we are told of the height and figure of the domes conftructed by the termites ; of the danger experienced by habitations in the neighbourhood of thefe infects; and of the deftruction they frequently occafion, fo as to deftroy in one night the whole furniture of a houfe; but thefe details are not applicable to the termites of the Cape of GoodHope, or at leaft to thofe I have had an opportunity of feeing, either in Camdebo, or the diftrict of Twenty-four-Rivers. I have found more than once termites in Africa; but they were neither fo dangerous nor fo deftructive as thofe mentioned by Smeathman. The higheft of their huts, which I faw, did not exceed four feet; and they were more or lefs folid, according to the folidity of the ground in which they were conftructed. In fhort, inftead of being covered with mofs and grafs like thofe feen by the Englifh traveller, they are always, in the part in which I travelled, perfectly fmooth, and
and of the fame colour as the earth of which they have been formed.

The Hottentots eat the nymphs of thefe ants, which they confider as a very great delicacy; and mine, when they found an opportunity, did not fail to open the nefts to get at them. There are alfo many birds and quadrupeds which carry on war againft thefe infects; but their moft dangerous enemy is a feecies of ant-bear, called by the planters erd-varken, (earth-hog), which makes them its principal nourifhment. When thefe retreats have been fearched and deferted, they become bee-hives, and fwarms of wild-bees take poffeffion of them in order to depofit there their honey and their young. My ape Kees fhewed a wonderful inftinct in difcovering thefe fecret repofitories of dainties, which he announced by repeatedly fkipping and jumping, and of which we fhared with him the profits: as for me, when I found any of thefe nefts empty, and when, having been opened only on the fides, their arched roofs remained entire and unhurt, I applied them to a very ufeful purpofe; I made natural ovens of them in which we cooked our victuals. Very little preparation was neceffary, except to clean them well, and afterwards to heat them with brufhwood. Our victuals could then be cooked in the utmoft perfection.

If we believe Kolben, Swart-Land and the diftrict of the Twenty-four-Rivers, when the Dutch firf fettled there, were inhabited by feveral tribes of favages, the names of which he mentions. At prefent, not one of thefe primitive and original nations is to be found, nor does tradition even fpeak of their exiftence. I have certainly too great a horror for crimes to attempt to excufe them, wherever they may be found; and if the firft planters got poffeffion of the two diftricts I have mentioned, only by exterminating the inhabitants, they were monfters whofe name and remembrance ought to be devoted to eternal execration. But before we condemn them, fhould we not convinceourfelves by evidence that they are really guilty? May not Kolben, who in every page of his work commits fo many miftakes, be erroneous alfo in this refpect? Have the people he mentions really exifted, and can we believe that the Dutch deftroyed them, when fo many hordes of Hottentots, whom they have preferved, ferved, fubfift in the country around and even in the midft of them to this very day?

However this may be; the diftrict of the Twefity four-Rivers is at prefent, as $I$ have already faid, the moft agreeable patt of the Dutch colonies at the Cape; for not only is grain of every feecies, as well as pulfe, cultivated there, but the inhabitants apply alfo to the culture of fruits; and this kind of commerce is the more lucrative to them, as, being almoft the only perfons who carry it on, they have little to fear from competition. The fruits which they fend to the town for fale are principally lemons, oranges, limes, fhaddocks, figs and pomegranates. They often tranfport thither waggon-loads at a time; and whatever be the quantity, fo great is the number of purchafers, that it is bought up almof immediately. The price of thefe fruits is generally from four to fix rix-dollars per hundred weight. There is a kind of orange, however, called at the Cape naretjes, which, notwithftanding the fmallnefs of its fize, is fold at a higher rate. The naretje, diftinguifhed like the citron by a protuberance at the upper end, is not fo large as the common orange, but in tafte and flavour is infinitely fuperior to that and every other fpecies. Grapes thrive well alfo in this diftrict, and tolerable wine and fpirits are made from them.

I have already faid that the colony of the Twenty-four-Rivers owes its name to a current that flows through it, and which receives into its channel a great number of finaller ftreams that difcharge themfelves along with it into the Berg-rivier. This affemblage of rivulets, by the ready means which it affords of watering the lands, is the circumftance that has moft contributed to fertilize the diftrict. As the mode of culture requires fcarcely any labour, the inhabitants enjoy a peaceful and happy life. The population, however, is far from being numerous; a confiderable part of the land is ftill uncultivated; and there are fcarcely to be feen more than forty or fifty plantations, whereas the number ought to be infinitely greater.

Such of my readers who know that man is fure to multiply wherever he finds the means of living commodioully, will not fail ta lay this deficiency in population to the charge of the govern-government : for myfelf, I blame not the government, but the numerous abufes introduced; and continually increafed, by the inferior agents it is obliged to employ. Government, undoubtedly, wifhes for the profperity of its colonies; its own intereft muft naturally infpire that wifh ; but in vain will it make wife regulations; in vain will it create numerous eftablifhments, if thofe to whom it entrufts its powers employ them only to its own detriment and the detriment of the colonies.

Without pretending to detail or examine thefe charges, which might be as imprudent as ufelefs a tafk, I fhall content myfelf with indulging a hope, that a town may be one day founded in the diftrict of the Twenty-fourRivers. Situated in the moft fertile part of the colony, it would foon, from the pleafantnefs of its fituation and climate, furpafs the Cape itfelf; and having the ready means of exportation, the cultivation of lands would neceffarily increafe with the population of the country. Its grain and its fruits, as well as the grain of a part of Swart-Land, might be conveyed in flat-bottomed boats by the Berg-rivier to the Bay of St. Helen; and it would be eafy to eftablifh fore-houfes on the banks and at the mouth of the Berg. At the Bay itfelf there might be a magazine for the coafting trade ; and this trade might be carried on with the Cape by means of floops, which, embracing the moment of favourable winds, would foon get thither with their merchandife, and would thus fupply with provifions, very advantageoully, and at a cheaper rate, both the town itfelf, and all the fhips from India and Europe which might put into Table Bay. From the abundance of paftures in the diftrict, great numbers of cattle might alfo be raifed in it. This fertile country, fo highly favoured by nature, would furnifh even timber for building; fince the trees, having lefs to fuffer in this quarter from the violence of the fouth-eaft winds, could not fail to thrive, if the inhabitants would only take care to form proper plantations. Saldanha Bay might ferve likewife as a central magazine for all that part of Swart-Land which hies near it, and which is too far from the Berg to fend its grain down that river. This magazine, befides the utility it would be of to the planters in the interior parts of the fettlement, would become a real benefit to the Ihips of all nations, which, driven from their courfe by contrary winds, and unable to enter Table Bay, might take fhelter in that of Saldanha, certain of finding there the refrefhments neceffary to enable them to continue their voyage.

The wifh which I here form for the conveniency of the planters, and the benefit of navigators in general, will doubtlefs long remain unaccomplifhed: for has the commercial policy of privileged companies ever been known to unite their private intereft to the intereft of the public, when that ardent thirf of gold, which rules fo powerfully the merchants of all nations, commands them, in fo imperious a manner, to oppofe, from miffaken felfif motives, every thing that does not tend to increafe the advantages which their greedy avarice leads them to expect? It is alfo for another reafon fcarcely to be expected that the Eaft India company will foon carry into execution either the eftablifhment in queftion, or thofe I have mentioned refpecting the bays of the delightful country of Auteniqua, however evident it may appear that they would promote the good and profperity of the colonies; fince, from the fear it is continually under that the captains in its

fervice may fell, for their own behoof, a part of its commodities, and particularly the fpiceries with which the hips that return from India are loaded, the company obliges them to touch at the Cape, where it is fuppofed they are watched more narrowly than they could be at any of the other adjacent bays. This fufpicion, which certainly does little honour to the officers it employs, is even carried fo far that a captain dares not take upon him to touch at a foreign port, without the moft urgent reafons; and every perfon defirous afterwards of commanding a veffel would be obliged, in this refpect, to be fill more fcrupulous. I have myfelf experienced a melancholy proof of the feverity of thefe orders ; for on my return from the Cape, during a moft unfortunate paffage, having fruggled nearly fix month againft contrary winds, and being in want of provifions, our captain would not venture to fop even for a moment at one of the Canaries, which we paffed within cannon fhot.

One day, however, the company may perhaps deign to examine my plan, and order it to be put in execution ; but till it is accomplifhed, I fhall fincerely regret that fo fine a country fhould be fuffered to remain almoft a defert ; and that for want of hands and cultivation it fhould lofe the benefit of every thing that nature has done for its fecundity. I am perfuaded that fugar canes, cotton and indigo, would grow extremely well in the diftrict of the Twenty-four-Rivers.

My hoft, before I quitted him, begged me to accept a few bottles of lemon juice, which I found afterwarcis of very great fervice; and at the fame time requefted that, on my return, I would bring him back a male and a female goat from the country of Nimiqua. He had heard this fpecies of goat highly extolled; and it is indeed the moft beautiful I have any where feen. His two fons made me promife alfo to fell to each of them one of my fufees. They expected that, when my journey was finifhed, I thould pafs that way again to the Cape, and were not aware that my intention was to return thither no more. On my departure, the family faluted me with a difcharge of fire-arms, which I was obliged to return; and the cafe was the fame at every other plantation that I paffed. All the inhabitants without exception ran with the utmoft eagernefs to meet me, firing their pieces and wihing me a happy journey: a circumftance that gave me the greateft uneafinefs, becaufe, haraffed by the noify reception of thefe planters, who were continually retarding my progrefs, I was obliged alfo, in my turn, to teftify my gratitude by burning my powder to no purpofe in thefe tirefome adieus.

Thefe inconvenient vifits confumed fo much of my time, that I had advanced as yet only four leagues. Next morning, I found myfelf in the diftrict of the Piquet mountains, and arrived, in good time, near the habitation of a refpectable veteran, named Albert Haanekam.

This planter was a kind of practical philofopher, who had devifed the means of rendering himfelf at once both happy and free; for happinefs and freedom are not always one and the fame thing. He had formed for himfelf a plan of life that had no refemblance to that of his fellow-planters. Without wife or children, having no connection with his neighbours, and no company, in fhort, but that of his own flaves, he lived, as one may fay, alone; yet knew fo well how to fupply the want of fociety, that time was not to him, as to the reft of the planters, a tedious and wearifome burthen. He employed it fometimes in labour, and fometimes in meditation; for he knew as little of reading as they did; and was indebted for his philofophy folely to his own reflections, and the combinations fuggefted by nature. With an exiftence of this kind, and happy after his own manner, he had never become a prey to languor; and the ferenity of his mind feemed even to have had an influence on his character: at leaft I never, in any part of the colony, witneffed a fprightlier converfation, or met with a more amiable and entertaining old man.

Having been previoufly informed that I was to pafs through his plantation, and to vifit the, Piquet mountains, he came to meet me; and offered to ferve me as guide in afcending the higheft of them, if I would confent to fpend the day with him. The firf part of his propofal was too agreeable to me not to acquiefce in the fecond. I attended him therefore to the mountain, where I met with nothing that deferved particular obfervation, but where I enjoyed the magnificent fpectacle of a view the more extenfive, as the atmofyhere was remarkably pure. The Table mountain was perfectly vifible to the naked fight, and with my glafs I could perceive alfo the town.

Nothing elevated my imagination fo much, when raifed to this height, as feeing the houfes of the Cape, on which I looked down. I moved my glafs with great eagernefs over the mafs of buildings; and felt as if I had gained a victory every time I concluded that I could diftinctly perceive the fituation of a particular houfe. Thofe of my friends engaged my fight longeft. "They are, perhaps, at this moment," faid I, "thinking of me, and, by an involuntary and " natural return, I am occupied only with "them. They are expreffing their wifhes "for the fuccefs of my enterprife; imagining, " perhaps, that I am far diftant and hid in ob${ }^{86}$ fcurity; while, in reality, I am but juft " exalted above the atmofphere which fur"rounds them."

On my return to the plantation, I found a fplendid repaft waiting for me; fplendid, that is, for the inhabitants of the colony, and fuited to the prejudices of their vanity; for thefe good and fimple fouls have, as well as others, $\mathrm{O}_{4}$ their their farhions and etiquette. It, however, prefented no idea of what we call a well arranged table, with delicate difhes and the richeft viands. Magnificence here confifts in covering the table with a profufion of meat; and the heavier it is loaded, the greater is the honour, and the more, in their eftimation, do they treat their gueft as a perfon of importance, entitled to their attentions and efteem.

We were three only at table, my hoit, Swanepoel, and myfelf. Twenty grenadiers, after a forced march, would, however, not have been fufficient to devour fuch a quantity of provifions; the difhes themfelves were heaped, and that in the middle fupported a pyramid of fix roafted fowls, which were all of an enormous fize.

This profufion, which would have fatiated even ogres *, prefented to me the loathfome picture of a farm-yard entirely laid wafte. My appetite inftantly forfook me; and, endeavouring to forget my difguft by dwelling on the caufe of my journey ftill prefent to my mind,

* A kind of fabulous beings or monfters, faid to feed upon human flefh, and which make a confpicuous figure in Fairy Tales. T.

I occupied

I occupied myfelf, during the repaft, in haraffing with queftions the mafter of the houfe. As for Swanepoel, his eyes were employed in attentively furveying the central and fmoking pyramid ; but incapable of enjoying any longer the gratification of eating, he could devour it only in imagination, and was almoft choked with fatiety and regret. I can compare this extravagant repaft, worthy of the heroes of Homer, to nothing better than to thofe fideboards which were feen, formerly, at certain periods of our feftivals, and which, bending under a multitude of all kinds of poultry, feemed expofed on purpofe to regale a famifhed people.

As I had already put many queftions to my hoft during our excurfion to the top of the Piquet mountain, I converfed with him at dinner on his poffeffions and orchards. Tired of fitting, I contrived to exprefs myéelf in fuch terms refpecting his fingular mode of life, as to make him at length think of leaving the table. He had no difficulty in juftifying the good opinion I had conceived of his activity and intelligence. We walked over all his grounds, in which I every where faw well cultivated fields, trees in athriving condition, plantations in the moft admirable order; in a word, an air of fertility and abundance, which I had not the pleafure of obferving on the other farms and plantations of the colony.

The diftrict of Piquet-berg, according to what my hoft told me, does not contain more than twenty-five or thirty plantations; nor can it, in my opinion, ever contain more, becaufe, having but a certain number of ftreams and rivulets, which the firt inhabitants of courfe took poffeffion of, thofe who may in future come to fettle will find only barren and parched fields totally deflitute of water. The foil, in general, is indifferent ; yet the proprietors raife what corn is neceffary for their own confumption. The only trade which the nature of the country allows them to carry on is, as at the Twenty-four-Rivers, that of fruit; and for this fruit there is no other fale than among the neighbouring planters, who fend themfelves to fetch it; for the diftance from Piquet-berg to the Cape is too great to undertake a journey thither merely to difpofe of oranges. My philofophic veteran was defirous of giving me a certain quantity of his,
to fupply me on my journey. In vain did I reprefent to him that I had purchafed a fufficient fock, when at the houfe of Liewenberg. He went and examined my carriages himfelf, and filled every empty face he could find with the produce of his orchards, which afterwards, and during the greater part of my journey, proved an agreeable relief both to me and my people.

To this obliging mark of attention he added, with the fame kindnefs, a prefent which was much better calculated to afford me pleafure. It confifted of three pair of pigeons of a particular fpecies, none of which I had ever before feen. However agrceable to me might be fuch an acquifition; I would, however, accept but one of the three pair, as that was fufficient for our amufement ; and I begged my generous hoft to keep the other two till I came back, though I had fully refolved within myfelf not to return.

In paffing the plantations of Ifaac Feraffi and Gerit Schmit, I was expofed to a frefh perfecution from invitations; but as I had not the fame motives to induce me to accept thefe as I had to accept that of Haanekam, I abrolutely refufed. I knew not a greater punifhment than fuch interruptions; and every time I paffed through the eftate of a planter, I was feized as with a fever when I faw the proprietor, with whofe compliments I was before acquainted: that is, I muft fleep at his houfe, and fpend a whole day in drinking and fmoking with him. I employed myfelf on my journey almoft entirely in fearching for pretexts to elude the purfuit of thefe good people, near whofe habitations I dared neither to ftop nor encamp: a man fearful of being robbed by them would not have fhunned their approach with more care than I did. How ofte 3 , when talking with my companions, did I figh after the moment when I fhould fee behind me the laft houfe of this too hofpitable colony !

I haftened my march as much as poffible, wiming to encamp on the other fide of the Kruys. This precipitation was not unattended with danger, as I learned to my coft ; for my life had nearly been the facrifice.

When at the diftance of about a quarter of a leagle from the river, night overtook me. Had I been more prudent I Should have encamped camped where I was; but as the road, during the whole day, had appeared to be good, I imagined it would continue fo to the banks of the Kruys, and I ordered my people to advance. As for me, having tripled the diftance by continually running after game, fatigue at length furprifed me, and I got into my carriage, and threw myfelf upon a mattrefs, to reft myfelf for a moment.

The Hottentot who fat on the pole and directed the laft yoke of oxen, difmounted from his feat and walked by their fide ; but his companion, who was before and who guided the firft yoke, had quitted his, fo that the Fottentot behind could not well fee wherehe drove them. The ground near the river became every inflant fteeper and more flippery. On a fudden a violent fhock threw the whole weight of the carriage on the pole, and it rolled, with all the cattle in confufion, to the brink of the river, without any of my Hottentots being able to ftop it or to alter its direction. On this movement, as rapid as it was violent, I endeavoured, but in vain, to jump out. I imagined that I was precipitated among the rocks. However, notwithftanding my fright, I ftill retained fufficient ficient coolnels to guard, as far as I was able, againft the worf misfortune; and making with my arms and legs under the tilt, in which I faw myfelf buried, fo many props to prevent contufions on the head, I waited with firmnefs till the carriage fhould ftop, as I found it impoffible to difmount. This fituation was extremely painful, but I continued in it only a few minutes. To roll thus without knowing where; to be fhaken about amidft the darknefs of a clofe carriage ; abandoned by my people for a confiderable fpace, and having no choice but that of being drowned or dafhed in pieces, was certainly enough to have fhaken the mof heroic courage.
My people, alarmed, both for themfelves and me, at the confequences of fo melancholy an accident, ran as faft as they could to affift me : but as they were unable to keep pace with the carriage, and as the darknefs of the night prevented them from feeing, in a road feldom trodden, the marks either of the oxen or the wheels; I heard them calling to me aloud, and talking to one another as if they had been difperfed. I replied and called to them in my turn; but whether through fear on their own account, or the dread of feeing me a mangled corfe, dafhed perhaps to pieces, I was not heard, and their cries drowned mine. This noife was increafed by the rattling of the other two carriages, which had alfo been hurried towards the river; but the drivers, more attentive to their cattle, had been able to moderate the violence of the impulfe.

At length, however, we met; and nothing could equal the joy of my companions when I affured them that I had fuftained no hurt. This was not the cafe with my carriages. My own, in particular, had fcattered as it flew the greater part of the utenfils it contained; and what was fill more remarkable, of the lemons which had been given me, not a fingle one remained. I was obliged to wait till day-light before I could collect again the different articles, and repair all the damage occafioned by this precipitate defcent. On the other fide of the river, which it was neceffary we fhould crofs in order to continue our journey, there was a kind of plantation belonging to a proprietor named Dirck Coché. I had need of accurate inftructions and information refpecting the route, which Coché was able to give me. It was neceffary alfo that I fhould purchafe a cer* tain number of fheep, and I flattered myfelf that he had it in his power to fupply me. Whilf my people, therefore, were employed in arranging my carriages, and preparing to proceed, I fet out before them, and having forded the Kruys on horfeback repaired to the plantation.

Scarcely had I entered into converfation with the owner, when his wife, ftarting up in a fright, uttered fo piercing a cry that every perfon in the houfe ran to her affiftance. Two ferpents had actually touched her legs: upon her moving I perceived them under the feat. We all armed ourfelves in the beft manner we could with chairs and fticks to deftroy them. When they faw this preparation, their rage was kindled, their eyes became enflamed, and raifing theirnecks, and hiffing in a moft furious manner, they attempted to dart upon us ; but being upon our guard and attacking them with ftill greater violence, they fell a facrifice to our repeated blows. It was fortunate for the woman that fhe had not been bitten; as they proved to be of a moft venomous fpecies, called at the Cape kooper-kapel, and fhe would infallibly have died in the fpace of a few minutes.

Such is the inconvenience of a country newly inhabited. Man continually fees his tranquillity interrupted, and his life endangered there by troublefome infects, ferocious beafts, and venomous reptiles. Coché, by way of caution, told me that the kooper-kapel was very common in the diftrict through which I was about to travel. After this intelligence, I formed a refolution that I conceived to be highly neceffary ; which was, not to pafs the night in my tent, but to fleep in my carriage, where I fhould have much lefs to apprehend from the formidable vifits of thefe alarming guefts.

Whilft I was concluding a bargain with the farmer for a few fheep, my carriages and their drivers croffed the Kruys, and I purfued my journey, keeping along the banks of the river; but I could not proceed far that day, as we had to travel over fand, and to crofs and re-crofs the Kruys fix times. Next day our fituation was ftill worfe; the fand was fo deep and fo loofe, that the wheels of my waggons funk almoft to the axle-tree ; and for each vehicle I was obliged to add four more oxen to Vol. I.
the twelve that already compofed the team. In this manner we paffed the plantation of Jofias Ingelbregt, and at length quitted the ferpentine courfe of the Kruys, which waters this wretched country, and reached Swart-basKraal. There are however men who, fandy and miferable as it is, inhabit this diftrict, and cultivate the few fpots of lefs barren land which are to be found there. One of them, named Hans Van Aart, had a plantation at Lange Valey (Long Lake), where I was obliged to fpend the night, and farther on was another belonging to Hermanes Lauw. I did not flop at the houfe of the latter ; in confequence of which I was forced to encamp on a dry plain, where I could not find a fingle drop of water to refrefh my cattle. By the way I had met with a prodigious number of partridges, and had killed about thirty, which I intended for my own fupper and that of my people. My cuftom, on fuch occafions, was to boil my game; for I had obferved that, when broiled or roafted, the fmell of the meat, being conveyed to a diftance by the winds; attracted during the night a number of hyænas and jackalls; which being obferved and driven away by my dogs, the howling and barking was fo inceffant that it was impoffible to enjoy a moment's repofe. As I could not in the prefent inftance, for want of water, caufe my partridges to be boiled, I put one on the gridiron for myfelf, and gave up the reft to my people, who roafted them upon fmall fpits, which they placed round the fire : but what I was afraid of actually happened: a number of carnivorous animals, drawn towards us by the fmell of the game, kept prowling round my camp, and my dogs barking at them did not allow us to Shut our eyes for an initant.
To this fatigue of the night was added thoughtfulnefs for the morrow. I did not know whether we fhould be fo fortunate as to find any water; and had reafon to apprehend that, after one day of thirft, my people and my cattle would have to fuffer a fecond fill more painful. When the morrow came, we found nothing but a fandy defert covered with briers and rufhes; but while I gave myfelf up to the moft melancholy reflections, I was roufed from my revery by the cry of a bird which paffed over my head. It was a berg-eend (mountain duck), or rather a beneficent genius which came to revive my hopes by announcing a difcovery I had no reafon to expect.

Perfuaded that this bird was flying in fearch of water, and that it would not fail to alight wherever, it fhould find any, I put fpurs to my horfe, and followed it on a full gallop, that I might not lofe fight of it. I was right in my conjecture: after a few minutes purfuit, I obferved it defcend to wards a large and high rock, where it alighted. I afcended this rock on foot, and found a large cavity, forming a natural bafon, filled with rain water, in which the animal was fwimming, plunging, and flapping its wings, with much apparent fatisfaction.

It would have been eafy for me to kill it; but, after the fervice which it had rendered me, how fhameful would have been the ingratitude! I contented myfelf with endeavouring to put it to fiight, in hopes that, as it had enjoyed for a fhort time only the pleafure of this bath, it would go in queft of another fomewhere in the neighbourhood, and thus point out to me a new ciRern. My expectations, however, were on this occafion difappointed: the bird indeed flew away; but, fcared perhaps for the firf time in its life by a human being, being, it continued its flight to a great diftance, and I foon loft fight of it.

From the top of the rock I had made a fignal to my people to advance towards me. When they arrived, I ordered them to fill my jars. I had feveral in my waggons ; and I certainly, upon leaving lange Valey, would not have fuffered them to be empty, had it been poffible for me to forefee the drought that awaited us. The jars being filled, I directed my people to water my horfes and a few of the fmaller animals belonging to my caravan. Thefe repeated draughts exhaufted my ciftern, fo that nothing was left for my poor oxen : but I knew that ruminating animals can endure both hunger and thirft for a confiderable period; and I befides flattered myfelf that, before the day was clofed, I fhould meet with another fortunate incident, fimilar to that which I had juft experienced. My hopes, however, were vain; during the whole day we had nothing but a dry and burning defert to traverfe. After dinner two of my oxen, exhaufted by thirft and fatigue, dropped down, and I was under the neceffity of leaving them behind-fad and melancholy prefage of the misfortunes that awaited me! In fhort, I was obliged in the evening, as the day before, to unyoke my cattle, and encamp on a fot totally deftitute of water, with the expectation of a fate ftill more difmal the day following.

A heavy fall of rain which happily took place during the night, revived my hopes; but, heavy as it was, it appeared to me at the time as if it could be of no fervice to my cattle; for what relief were they likely to derive from water which difappeared as foon as it fell, and was inftantly loft in the fand? They neverthelefs found means to drink of this rain, which I thought would be ufelefs to them, by a method, the poffibility of which I could never have fufpected, and which afforded me a new opportunity of admiring the fagacity of animal infinct. The water as it fell upon them formed itfelf into drops, which, uniting, ran down their fides in fmall freams. On the commencement of the ftorm they had affembled in groups, and in this pofition, thronged one againft the other, licked and collected each from the body of its neighbour the ftreamlets of rain as it trickled down. My cattle, by this unexpected fupply, having quenched their thirf, and
and being at the fame time refrefhed, recovered their ftrength: but what increafed my aftonifhment was, that the two I had left on the road, worn out and expiring, had been alfo revived, and doubtlefs in the fame manner; for they both joined my camp in the night; and Klaas, who always took delight in being the firft to communicate agreeable intelligence, came to me at day-break, elated with joy, to inform me of the circumftance.

I was now only a day's journey from Heerelogement (mafter's refidence), where I fhould find, I was told, a very abundant fpring of water, a moft agreeable retreat, and groves and grottos covered with infcriptions and figures. By the defcription that was given me, it appeared as if a fecond Angelica, or fome Hottentot Medor, had vifited and embellifhed this fcene of enchantment. I banifhed, however, from my mind all this improbable romance, and indulged only the hope of finding the fountain. My wants were urgent; I looked forward to it, therefore, with longing expectation, and refolved, if poffible, to reach it before night. I arrived ; I found it ; and, with whatever refpect the defcription of it ought to have infpired me, its waters were foon rendered turbid by my Hottentots and cattle. With regard to the grotto, the infcriptions, the creeping fhrubs hanging in feftoons, all thefe like a dream vanifhed on our approach. I faw only a large cavern, which ferved to fhelter me and my caravan. It was fpacious and lofty; and, being open at the eaft, we were covered without being fhut up in it. Situated upon a fmall mount, it overlooked on one fide my camp and the plain, which, by the uniform and dreary profpect it prefented, filled me with melancholy. and difcouragement; and on the other was joined to an immenfe chain of dry mountains, extending in the form of an amphitheatre, the nakednefs of which, and the different tints of ochre, grey, and white, with which they were variegated, exhibited a view at once terrifying and majeftic. The remains of a habitation, now fallen into ruins, attefted that the proprietor had been long forced to abandon this wild and unproductive wafte. I made preparations for paifing the night in the grotto; but I was obliged to fhare it with jackdaws and woodpigeons which repaired to it at the clofe of the day, and perched in hundreds on a tree, the roots of which were implanted in an enormous crevice, while one of its branches overfpread the floor of this natural hall.

The figures and infcriptions confifted only of a few caricatures of the elephant and oftrich, with the names of three or four travellers who had probably ftopped here formerly, like myfelf, to refrefh themfelves.

Though the fountain contained a greater abundance of water than I expected, my uneafinefs was not on that account diminifhed. We had fill to traverfe extenfive plains of fand; and every thing announced that I fhould, perhaps, not find in them fo much as a fpring to cool our thirf. A ray of hope, however, diffipated for a moment my fear. In the morning, two large clouds which rofe on the horizon, and which approached towards us, feemed to promife an abundant rain. Meanwhile nothing more fatal could have prefented itfelf to our view; for thefe clouds confifted of myriads of locufts, voracious and deftructive infects, brought from afar by the winds. The fight of them threw my people into the utmoft conflernation, by whom they were confidered as the harbingers of drought and fterility. My ape alone was a ftranger to this general alarm : he fhewed, on the contrary, figns of joy and exultation, and followed with his eyes the direction of the locufts, expecting with impatience that fome of them would drop, that he might feize and devour them at pleafure.

Whilft we were indulged at the fountain of Heere-logement with a temporary enjoyment of the neceffary refrefhments, we did not neglect our ufual labours and refearches. Among the rocks, and on the mountains which furrounded us, we found abundance of thofe fmall quadrupeds called in the country dafen, and by Buffon the daman. I knew already by experience that this fmall animal was excellent eating. To people who for a long time had lived on lean beef and mutton, this was a fortunate opportunity of varying our food; and the flefh of this animal, however fat it might be, could not but be confidered by us as a delicious treat. My people devoured it with their eyes, even before it was in our poffeffion. We all, therefore, fet out in purfuit of the damans, and each procured as many as he could. I had already killed a few, when, on turning a rock, I roufed a panther, which I fired at ; but the fhot in my fufee being too fmall to ftrike it inftantly dead, it efcaped. It was probable, however, that, having found a fort of warren there to fupply it with food, it would not retire far from its haunt, and that I fhould meet with it again. I accordingly fearched the environs with my dogs, and fucceeded in finding its ufual place of retreat, where I faw feveral heaps of the bones of damans, and the remains of various kinds of frnall antelopes.

This difcovery promifed me a double fatiffaction; that of killing the panther when it fhould return to its hiding-place, and that of finding game in the neighbourhood for my table, as the animal had found for its repaft. Thefe pleafures, however, were not realized: for neither I nor my people met with any antelopes, which perhaps had all been deftroyed by the panther; and with regard to the animal itfelf, I in vain fpent two wearifome hours of the night waiting for it in ambuh : it did not appear ; which induced me to believe that I had

I had really wounded it, and that it had probably gone elfewhere to die.

During my hunting excurfion I fell in with a Hottentot, fervant to a planter in the neighbourhood, for whom he was looking after a flock of fheep. Though I had already, among my animals, a tolerable lot of fheep; yet, as the barrennefs of the country I had begun to traverfe made me apprehenfive that, with all my economy, they might not be fufficient for our confumption, I wifhed to increafe the number by purchafing fome from the Hottentot. As a keeper, it is true, this man had no right to difpofe of them ; but I offered him fo advantageous a price, that his mafter could not but have been fatisfied with his bargain. He perfifted, however, in refufing me; and the only benefit I derived from our interview was a knowledge of my beft and fhorteft road to the Elephants-River, where I was anxious to arrive.

According to this fhepherd, I had ftill a long day's journey to travel, which it would be neceffary when I fet out to accomplifh as fpeedily as poffible, without interruption and without halting, as during the whole route neither neither water nor pafturage would be found. He informed me alfo, that beyond the river I fhould meet with the fame inconveniences, till I arrived at the country of the Nimiquas; and added, that though it was now the rainy feafon, the rain had univerfally failed; that a dreadful drought was every where experienced; and that never in the remembrance of man had this part of Africa fuffered fuch diftrefs.

This intelligence troubled and difquieted my mind. I forefaw nothing but misfortunes to my enterprife; and we even already began to experience them. Six weeks only had elapfed fince I quitted the Cape, yet my oxen were as much fatigued as they had been during my firf journey after a march of fix months. To give them time to reft themfelves and recover their ftrength, I remained at Heerelogement feven whole days, during which our table occafioned fuch a confumption of dafen or damans, that even my Hottentots began to loathe them. At length, however, on the fourth of July, the war we had declared againft thefe poor animals ceafed, and I quitted the place, after having left my name and the date of my arrival in the grotto, according to the cuftom of preceding travellers.

Agreeably to the advice of the fhepherd, I fet out at break of day; and after a very fatiguing march we perceived towards night, from the elevated point on which we then were, the Elephants-River winding below us, at the diftance of about half a league; but as I knew by experience the danger of defcending mountains in the night time, I refolved to encamp on the eminence, and, notwithftanding the extreme fatigue of my cattle, to wait for the morning, before I fhould proceed to the river.
On each fide it was bordered with very large mimofas, and various kinds of white trees of the fpecies of the willow; but the ground was every where fcorched and dry, and the fmalleft trace of verdure was not to be perceived even under the trees. In vain did I fearch along the banks in hopes of finding fome lefs parched fpot which might afford grafs for my cattle : I could not dicover 'a fingle tuft of herbage ; fo that they were obliged to be fatiffied with a few oily plants, and the leaves of Mrubs.

At a little diftance from the river was a houfe
houle inhabited by a widow, Van-Zeil, and her family, which I difcovered by feeing fome cultivated fields. I repaired to it, and met with the moft friendly reception. The widow fold me fome fheep, and alfo four hundred pounds of tobacco, which I thought proper to add to my ftock. For this tobacco, which was of her own growth, I paid at the rate of two-pence Dutch money per pound, which made about eighty livres for the whole quantity. I purchafed alfo fome ftrong liquor, to fupply the place of that which I had already confumed. The widow, in the courfe of our converfation, confirmed the account of the Hottentot fhepherd refpecting the difaftrous drought by which the country was defolated; a drought indeed fo exceffive, that-all the hordes of the Leffer Nimiquas had quitted the interior parts of the country, in order to approach the fea-coaft.

By the dreary profpect before me, I was enabled to judge what the country would be into which I was about to enter; and yet I fill entertained hopes, and endeavoured, as I may fay, to quiet my fears by delufion: fo poffible and even probable does that appear, which coincides with our ardent wifhes. If the country of the Leffer Nimiquas, faid I, has been deprived of rain, this fcarcity of water has perhaps been only local; the diftricts fituated beyond it may not have experienced the fame drought, and may have had an abundant fupply of what has been hitherto wanting in thofe through which I have travelled.

Reafoning thus from very uncertain probabilities, I employed my thoughts in devifing means for traverfing a country, the drynefs of which, however terrifying, might not be an invincible difficulty; and I hoped that it would be fucceeded by another better watered, the temperature and fertility of which would perhaps make amends for all my fatigue.

When the widow found that'I was determined to depart, notwithftanding her advice and remonftrances, fhe prepared for me a fmall fupply of bifcuit, and defired her two fons to fhow me the only ford at which I could crofs the river without danger. We were obliged to go along the bank downwards to a confiderable diftance to find this paffage, to which my guides conducted me with their oxen;
and as a teftimony of their friendfip they withed to accompany me to the other fide, and to remain with me till the next morning; but I declined their offer, becaufe, as the weather vifibly threatened rain, I was apprehenfive that the water might fuddenly rife, and prevent their return. It was indeed fortunate for me that I croffed the river that evening ; for during the night there came on a deluge, which continued, without interruption, for three entire days, and which flattered me with new hopes of the happy fuccefs of my journey. Its violence was even.fo great, from the very firft moment it began, that I was obliged to halt, and to encamp on the border of the river. I was here favoured by my good fortune; fince, had I been one day later, I fhould have found no ford, and fhould have been reduced to the neceffity of croffing on rafts; a laborious method, which would have occafioned to my people much fatigue, and to me a great lofs of time; befides that, the ftream being rapid and enclofed between fteep banks, the ufe of a raft, during an inundation, would have been attended with confiderable danger.

The fecond day the waters fwelled fo much as to reach my waggons; and I was obliged f, therefore, to remove my camp to a greater diftance towards the plain. Had the rife taken place during the night, my camp might have been fwept entirely away; and my own life, and the lives of my people, have been expofed to the moft imminent peril.

At the Cape, I had often heard of the rifk which a traveller runs in this part of Africa, when he encamps too near rivers. Refpecting thefe dangers the planters had even told me wonderful tales, to which I gave little credit, confidering them only as the exaggerations of the narrators; but experience has fince convinced me of their truth. Many a time, when encamped during the moft beautiful weather, and even after a very great drought, near fmall rivers, and at a diftance from their banks, have I feen them fo fwell on a fudden, by the burfting of a ftorm, as, in lefs than three hours, to rife above the trees on their banks, inundate, the plains to a confiderable diftance, and form around me an immenfe lake.

It is, therefore, prudent in a traveller never to encamp near rivers, except on an eminence which, when at their greateft height, they cannot feach; and it is eafy to afcertain this boundary by infpecting the trees on their banks. In their overflow they carry along with them reeds and grafs, which, being caught by the branches, remain fufpended, and atteft how far the water has rifen. In the day-time we may without danger ftation ourfelves on the banks, under the fhelter of the trees. In general, indeed, no thade is to be found any where elfe; and if an inundation fhould happen, there would at leaft be little or no rifk, as nothing could prevent its being feen; but to remain thus fituated in the night, would be expofing ourfelves imprudently, and efpecially during the winter monfoon.

The rain having at length ceafed the third day, I proceeded on my journey; and follow. ing for three hours the courfe of the ftream downwards, I arrived at the confluence of a rivulet, called in the Hottentot language Koignas, and by the Dutch Dwars-rivier (crofsriver). This ftream, which, like the greater part of thofe in Africa, flows only during the rainy feafon, was fo deeply enclofed between banks in the place where we could crofs, that we did not obferve it till we were clofe upon its brink. The paffage acrofs this rivulet, to fipeak the truth, gave me great uneafinefs; not indeed on account of the Koignas itfelf, which is very narrow, and, receiving little water from other ftreams, had not been much increafed by the rain; but on account of the difficulty of approaching it, occafioned by the fteepnefs and height of its banks. The foil, befides, confifted of glutinous earth, which the rains had rendered fo flippery, that the defcent was extremely dangerous for my carriages. Thus did drought and rain both confpire to defeat my intentions; and every thing, in fhort, feemed in combination to prefent at every ftep new obftacles to my progrefs.

Klaas, wifhing to contribute by his care to. the happy fuccefs of our paffage, took upon him to direct the firft waggon, and put himfelf at the head of the oxen : but his foot having flipped in defcending, he fell down; and before he had time to rife he was not only trod upon by the firft pair of oxen, but the other four alfo paffed over his body. Luckily I had obferved him fall, and my cries brought to his aid his companions, who, favouring by their refiftance the efforts made by the driver to keep back the laft yoke, ftopped the carriage at the very moment that it was about to defcend, and juft ready to roll over my unfortunate favourite. I dragged him from below the oxen; and it is impoffible for me to exprefs the joy I felt, when, having placed him on his legs again, and interrogated him refpecting his fall, he informed me that he had received no material injury. He had however fuffered fome contufions from the oxen; but thefe animals, though hurried down the defcent, had, from an intinct of which I admired the fagacity, fpared him as much as circumftances would allow : and indeed it is almoft incredible that fo many feet fhould have paffed over him without cruhing him to death.

Having landed on the right bank of the Koignas, I directed my route, according to the information $I$ had received from the widow Van-Zeil, towards the Vleermuys-Klip (rock of bats). As I advanced, I obferved the track of a lion quite frefh. This difcovery, which fince my departure from the Cape was the firft of the kind, warned mé to be upon my guard in our encampment during the night. The animal had been lurking among the bufhes near the river, at the time of our croffing it, and had doubtlefs been determined to fly to the plain by the noife of my caravan. I went in purfuit of him with one of my hunters and fome dogs, and we followed him the greater part of the day; but the approach of night, and the fear of lofing our way, as it was at laft fo dark that I could no longer diftinguifh the tracks of the wheels of my carriages, compelled me to return to my camp.

Swanepcel, to fupply me with a beacon by which to direct my courfe, had caufed the fires to be lighted fooner than ufual. I have already faid that it was cuftomary for us to kindle feveral every evening ; they ferved both to fecure us againft the cold during the night, and to frighten away hurtful and dangerous animals; but on this occafion they attracted a particular fpecies, from which it was impoffible for us to defend ourfelves. The rock I have mentioned, near which we were encamped, contained an immenfe quantity of bats, and it is from this circumftance it takes its name. Of thefe animals fome, fcared by a light that was new to them, made in their holes fo frightful a noife as almoft to ftun me; while others fluttered fluttered in hundreds around us, fqueaking, and every now and then flapping their wings in our faces. In vain did we attempt to defend ourfelves; the threatening crowd only increafed, and we received blows from eyery quarter. Favoured by the darknefs, I perhaps might have fecured myfelf againft their infults by returning to my waggon; but how efcape from the piercing din of this countlefs multitude, which made the very rocks refound with their cries? My cattle alfo were as much annoyed by them as ourfelves; and every thing announced a difagreeable night, wi hout the hope of relief. In this diftreffing fituation, I faw only one courfe to be purfued; which was, to decamp immediately, and leave the field of battle to thefe troublefome and obftinate enemies,

I accordingly gave orders to frike our tents and yoke the cattle, and, proceeding down the Elephants-River, encamped at a place called in the Hottentot language Krekenap, and in Dutch Back-boove.

Notwithftanding, the vexation and ill humour into which this nocturnal decampment, and the adventure that occafioned it, had thrown us, I was pleafed with the idea of ad. vancing, from the hope of finding convenient pafturage for my animals, which were all reduced to a moft deplorable condition, and particularly my oxen and horfes, which, fince we left Heere-logement, having had nothing but fuch oily plants to feed upon as had been fpared by the drought, were feized with a loofenefs, which gave me very great uneafinefs. That they night recover, I allowed them a few days reft ; during which, defirous of turning this delay to advantage, I refolved to traverfe the neighbourhood, and to explore the country, efpecially the mouth of the Elephants-River, which, from the information I had received, could be only a fhort diftance from my new camp.

Klaas, though he ftill felt fome pains from his fall, was earneft in his defire to accompany me. I fet out, therefore, attended by him and three more of my people, among whom was one of thofe Hottentots he had engaged in my fervice, and who was loaded with my private tent, the only baggage I thought it neceffary to take with me. My intention was to proceed along the bank of the river; and I conceived that by thus following its courfe I fhould thorten the way, as I fhould run thereby the lefs rifk of lofing myfelf: but the rain had the day before fo fwelled the river, that it had in many parts overflowed, and had formed, efpecially in the low lands, immenfe lakes. Thefe collections of water, which often prefented themfelves, readered it neceflary for us to make long windings, that greatly retarded our progrefs; and to reach the fea, I was therefore obliged to employ more time than, under other circumfances, fuch a diftance would have required. I would not, however, alter my route, becaufe the lakes were covered with an immenfe multitude of aquatic birds of every kind, and particularly gulls, fea-fwallows, and flamingos, which I faw in thoufands.

I thought I muft find among thefe innumerable flocks new objecis worthy of being added to my collection. I indeed killed feveral, and among thefe a charming bird three feet in height, which at prefent makes a part of my cabinet of natural hiftory. Its head and throat, which are entirely bare, are covered with a fkin of the brighteft red, terminated by a band of a beautiful orange, which feparates the naked part from that covered with feathers,

The upper part of the wings, having broad ftripes of a fine violet colour, agreeably fhaded, is bordered by a white band of feathers, the thick and filky beards of which, feparated from each other, have a perfect refemblance to a rich fringe. The quills of the wings and tail are of a greenih black, which, as it receives the light in a more or lefs oblique direction, affumes the appearance of violet or purple. The reft of the plumage is of a beautiful white. The bill, which is long and fomewhat crooked, is yellow, as are the feet. This bird belongs to the genus of the ibis, of which we are already acquainted with feveral fpecies.

Having at length arrived before night at the fea-fhore, I caufed my tent to be erected, and a fire to be kindled; but notwithftanding our great fatigue none of us could clofe our eyes. The fea breeze was' fo fharp, and the cold fo exceffive, that we were obliged to employ the whole night in warming ourfelves. This ftate of fuffering made me wait with impatience for the day; and as foon as it appeared I fet out in queft of game with three of my people, advancing along the banks of the river.

My companions foon left me, and went ta
hunt among the fand-hills, with a view of finding fome bird or animal with which I was unacquainted, or any other extraordinary object proper to gratify my curiofity. They gave themfelves confiderable trouble ; but their zeal was unaccompanied with fuccefs. All their fearch ended in the difcovery of a few antelopes (ree-bock), at which they fired; and which, flying towards me, followed each other in a fring, as they paffed the fpot where I ftood. I had an opportunity of firing ate them in my turn; but at that moment I was engaged in viewing a prodigious number of vultures, and other birds of prey, which I faw flying round, or hovering in the air, and then alighting at the diftance of a quarter of a league before me. My people had killed two of thofe antelopes called fteen-bocks; but, regardlefs of this acquifition, I was devouring with my eyes the carnivorous birds I had difcovered, which were becoming every moment more numerous; and my curiofity was doubled, when I was told by my people that thefe birds were attracted by the fmell of a dead elephant, or fome other animal, on which it was probable they were feeding.

When we approached, we actually found on the fhore a fpermaceti whale about fifty feet in length. It was lying at the diftance of more than a hundred paces from the fea; and had doubtlefs been forced thither by the waves; but the fea muft certainly have experienced a moft tremendous ftorm, to be able to throw fo far a mafs fo enormous. It was attacked by a variety of carnivorous birds, and by a number of crows; but particularly by different ipecies of thofe fmall quadrupeds, of the genus of the polecat and weafel, which, at the Cape, are known under the general name of muysbond. All thefe animals were bufily feeding upon the whale, of which a confiderable part had already been devoured by them; but our approach difturbed the enjoyment of their repaft. The birds betook themfelves to flight; the muys-bonden fcampered away; the crows, however, a fpecies of carnivorous animals more obftinate than any other, remained and were loth to quit their prey: without being frightened by our vifit, they hovered round the carcafe, and over our heads, croaking in the mof frightful manner.

The fand, to the diftance of more than fifteen feet round the whale, was moittened with its blubber, which had been converted into oil by the heat of the fun. The lofs of this greafe, difperfed in this manner, was a fource of affliction to my Hottentots, who regretted that they had not within their reach one of my carriages loaded with a dozen barrels, that they might fill them with oil; an event which would have rendered them happy during the whole journey. Defire, however, foon begets induftry: they thought of their antelopes, and requefted my permiffion to difpofe of them. Having obtained it, they returned to the fpot where they were hid, and, flaying them, made bags of their fkins, of which each was capable of holding more than forty pounds of oil.

I endeavoured myfelf to derive fome benefit from the whale. Examining it with attention, I obferved various kinds of beetles crawling over this immenfe body of carrion, and employed alfo in devouring it. Having counted fourteen different fpecies, I began to hunt thefe fwarms of infects; and fome individuals felected from each fpecies were, in turn, facrificed to my favourite paffion, and ferved to enrich my fimall collection. The repofitory in which which I preferved them was a flat light box made of deal, which I placed above the crown of my hat ; and in order that it might be carried the more commodioufly, it was, like the hat itfelf, of a round form, and fecured as well as fhaded by the oftrich-feathers with which I was accuftomed to ornament my head.

More fatisfied with what I had collected than with the immenfe provifion of oil made by my Hottentots, I returned to my tent, which had been guarded in my abfence by one of my people. Having feen by the way, among the fand-hills, a confiderable quantity of the dung of elephants; I was induced to believe that thefe animals muft abound in this diftrict; and that the river had not unjuftly acquired its name from them. None of the dung was indeed frefh; but I concluded from this circumftance that the elephants ufually frequented the right bank of the river, and that, forced at this feafon by the drought to quit a fpot that was now become barren, they had croffed over to the left, which I fuppofed to be lefs parched.

Thefe, however, were only conjectures; and probaprobability, perhaps, ought rather to have led me to believe that thefe animals, without changing from the one bank to the other, had retired into the interior parts of the country. A defire of meeting with a herd or two, and of hunting them, had neverthelefs fo heated my imagination, that, by attempting to gratify it, I expofed myfelf to the danger of being irreparably loft, with the beft Hottentot of my caravan. I fhall here give a particular account of this celebrated inftance of fool-hardinefs, which was nothing lefs than to crofs with my fire-arms, baggage, and attendants, a confiderable river fwelled by inundations, in order to encamp on the oppofite fide.

Fortunately I had with me excellent fwimmers, to whom the croffing of a river, whatever might be its breadth, could be no caufe of unealinefs. With me the cafe was entirely different. The reader will recollect that I once before imprudently rifqued my life, in my firt journey, when purfuing an eagle on the banks of the Queer-Boom. Warned by this danger, I had fince exercifed myfelf frequently in fwimming, and had indeed never neglected it when an opportunity occurred. I was however as yet very imperfeetly acquainted with the art 4 and I by no means found myfelf fuficiently confident to attempt an overflowing river, which was at the fame time extremely rapid and of an immenfe breadth. I held a confultation therefore with my people on the courfe to be purfued, and the beft and moft prudent means to enfure its fuccefs.

The firf idea that fuggefted itfelf to us was that of a raft; which was the moft natural as well as the moft convenient mode of conveyance, and that which I had tried before without any accident, but on rivers, it is true, lefs dangerous. Trufting to the ftrength of my fwimmers, I imagined for a moment that it would be an eafy tafk for them to drag it to the oppofite bank; but on examining the difficulties more minutely, we apprehended, and with reafon, that, as the raft would form an extenfive furface, it might acquire a velocity which it would not be poffible for the fwimmers to overcome and to direct. It was neceffary however to find or to confluct fome $\mathrm{f}_{\mathrm{p}}$ ecies of float that would bear me, and they might be able to conduct. My Hottentots had no fkill upon this fubject. How indeed fhould they be ingenious in refources of which none of them had any need? And by what ftrange accident did it happen, that there ftood upon this fhore a native of Surinam, educated at Paris, and incapable of fwimming? The incapacity was all my own: it was therefore juft that I fhould invent the means of relieving it. I propofed to launch upon the ftream the trunk of a tree, upon which I fhould feat myfelf aftride ; and my four companions unanimoufly exhorted me to have courage, and they would anfwer with their lives for my fafe arrival on the oppofite fhore.

Thus animated, I felt no longer the fmalleft hefitation : it remained only to find the fpecies of float requifite for my purpofe. Of trunks, indeed, there was an abundance; for the inundation, as is fure to be the cafe in thofe countries where trees and plants, paffing through the various ftages of vegetable life, perifh as they ftand, and wither on their roots, had overturned great numbers, and fcattered them along the banks; but the majority of them fill retained their branches, and of thofe without branches, fome were too fhort, fome too long, and others too flender. It was necef. Vol. I.

fary to fix upon one that was in all refpects favourable to our project; and after proceeding to a confiderable diftance up the river, we at length fucceeded. The difficulty that had attended this refearch had been accompanied with no little' murmuring; meanwhile to this very circumftance, in the end, were we indebted for our lives.

Our firft operation was to launch the tree, and to fix to one end of it two ftrings of leather, to enable the fwimmers to drag it after them. We then rolled up in a bundle their kroffes and my tent, which we faftened to the middle of the float, tying firmly at the fame time to this bundle the two leathern veffels of oil, one on each fide. Thefe veffels I thought would not only ferve to diminifh the weight of the machine, but alfo prevent it from overfetting and plunging me into the water.

It remained to find a method of tranfporting our powder-flafks and artillery, and particularly of preferving them dry. This care I took upon myfelf. It would be poffible, I imagined, to hold my fufees refting on my fhoulders; and as to the powder-flafks, I fufpended them from my neck, with my watch. The preparations being being finifhed, and every arrangement made for fo fingular a paffage, I proceed, accoutred in this grotefque manner, to my ftation. I enter the water aftride on my log, place myfelf erect, as if on a faddle, that is to fay, upon the kroffes and tent between the leathern veffels; my fwimmers dart forward, they take hold of the ftrings, they draw along the frail and perilous bark, with its cargo and paffenger, and I behold myfelf adrift upon the ftream.

So many precautions might fuffice to fecure me againft every accident. I was therefore free from apprehenfion. At the fame time, not to exhauft my fwimmers, to whom fo wide a paffage muft prove trying, I fettled with them that there fhould be only two of them in the front to pull me along, while the other two, refting upon the hinder part of the raft, might ftrike with their feet, and pufh me forward with their bodies; thefe laft ferving to relieve the others as occafion fhould require : a pleafant kind of Tritons, who were foon to give a high degree of alarm to their Neptune.

At firf we proceeded delightfully; becaufe the part of the river which had overflowed the banks, fcarcely poffeffing any motion, offered R 2 of courfe very little refiftance. The fwimmers, therefore, dragged me along without difficulty; they were even ridiculing the fear they had entertained of not fucceeding, and I myfelf was making merry at my own expence. I could not help laughing at my ftiff and conftrained attitude; with my two arms raifed aloft holding in the air my inftruments of death; with the collar that was about my neck, and the baggage which furrounded my waift, ferving as ballaft to the moft fingular conveyance that the mind of man perhaps had ever invented: but the fcene was prefently changed, and the accents of our voices became expreffive of very different fentiments.

Scarcely had we entered the current when, its rapidity overpowering our efforts, we faw ourfelves gradually drifted out of our courfe; and foon its violence was fo great that, notwithftanding the courage and dexterity with which my negroes combated with the water, we found ourfelves haftening towards the fea.

Had we been actually carried thither, no exertion could have faved me: I muft infallibly have perihhed. However, as my good fortune would have it, the wind, blowing from the
the fea, counteracted in fome meafure the current, and retarded our deftruction : but, at the fame time, it excited waves that prevented us from advancing to our deftination, and which befides fo continually covered us with water, that we were every inftant hid from each other.

By an inconvenience alfo which it was not poffible to have forefeen, and which would now admit of no remedy, the trunk, which had hitherto continued fteadily in its horizontal pofition, could no longer be kept in it by any effort. Sometimes it preffed with violence upon the fwimmers that conducted it, and rendered it impoffible to preferve the thongs at their full extent, or to derive any advantage from them. Sometimes it was urged with equal force in the oppofite direction; in which cafe it hung with irrefiftible weight upon the thongs, pulling back the guides, and fhaking them completely out of their courfe. But, what was worfe, it often funk entirely under water at one end, while the other was raifed to a fituation nearly vertical. In this pofture, the affiftance of the fwimmers behind was rendered ufelefs; and I faw myfelf, in fpite of all my R 3 Hotten-

Hottentots could do, carried along by the current, toffed this way and that, and ready every moment to lofe my equilibrium.

The danger was imminent. The fwimmers in the rear precipitately quitted their poft, and, feizing the thongs, all four endeavoured to pull me forward with their utmoft frength. I attempted by the ufe of my feet to affift their efforts. Their exertions were incredible : they had promifed to place me in fafety on the oppofite fhore, and they deemed themfelves obliged rather to die than to quit their undertaking; but, notwithftanding their unfhaken fidelity, I began to defpair. The force of the current feemed ftronger and ftronger; it drew me every moment towards the fea; and I faw no profpect of fafety but in quitting the trunk, the accoutrements about my neck, my guns, and all my conveniences, and cafting myfelf upon the mercy of my Hottentots, hoping that they, by furrounding me, would be able to keep me above water, and convey me either to the fhore we fought, or the fhore we had left.

In the midft of the moft lively alarm I had ever experienced, would it be fuppofed what was the nature of the confolation that diminifhed my horror? I ftrongly felt upon this occafion how much the calamities of man are leffened by being divided. I commiferated the poffible fate of my brave attendants, who feemed upon the point of facrificing their lives to their attachment to me: yet this attachment took away the bitternefs of death : I fhould at leaft not be abandoned till I had experienced all the attentions of friendihip.

Meanwhile my poor Hottentots, panting, exhaufted, and deprived of ftrength, called on each other with a feeble voice to perfevere. Not one relaxed his hold of the thong; not one ceafed to fwim, or to oppofe fome fort of refiftance to the ftream; they had recourfe to fkill where ftrength failed, and were attentive to improve every poffible advantage. One of them was wholly new to my fervice, a ftranger to my intercourfe and my perfon; yet he did not yield to his comrades in pertinacity, and I believe would have been one of the firft to perifh in the exertion.

Death feemed to fare us in the face, when I began to perceive, by the diminifhed refiftance, that we had fufficiently cleared the centre of the current; they perceived it too: they collected all their force; they took breath; they found themfelves in a perfect calm; and prefently they gained the fhallow, where they could touch the bottom with their feet. The firft who felt it announced it by a fhout, which was repeated by the reft. In vain fhould I attempt to paint the emotion which now burft forth from us all. I difengaged myfelf from the grotefque fituation, which had excited alternately our pleafantry and our alarms; I leaped upon the fhore; I threw myfelf upon the neck of my deliverers, and they embraced me with tranfport.

Our firft care was to kindle a large fire, by which to warm ourfelves and dry our clothes. From the combined effect of fear and the water, we fhivered as with an ague. My fwimmers, by a happy forefight, had provided themfelves with a calabafh of brandy. Notwithftanding my repugnance to this liquor, in the prefent inftance I partook of it with pleafure; and though the quantity I drank was fmall, it braced up my nerves and initilled new life into my frame. In order to have the free ufe of my hands in clinging to the trunk, I had been obliged during our paffage to faften my artillery to my knees; it had accordingly been wetted; and I haftened to repair the mifchief by wiping and drying it. Twenty times had I been drenched myfelf by the waves; yet the water had fortunately neither penetrated my powder-flafks, nor injured my watch. What reafon had I to rejoice that I had fo far perfevered as not to abandon the raft! The lofs of my fire-arms and my tent would have been irreparable; and not only would it have defeated the object for which I had croffed the river, but have greatly incommoded me in my general expedition.

At the time, however, other thoughts occupied my mind. I congratulated myfelf folely on the danger we had efcaped; of the greatnefs of which I had no conception, till I obferved from our landing-place the diftance we had paffed. Then it was that I reflected with ferioufnefs on the extravagance of my folly, and the rafhneifs of the enterprife. Upon viewing the paffage, I fhuddered with terror. It was not a river that we had croffed, but a vaft inundation, of which the eye could fcarcely reach the extent. As I had no inftruments to meafure it, it is impoffible for me to fpeak with accuracy of its breadth; but fome eftimation may be formed from the time we were upon the water, which I obferved to be a full half-hour : meanwhile an allowance muft be made for the rapidity of the ftream, which drifted us from our courfe and retarded our paffage.

Perceiving my Hottentots to be recovered a little from their fatigue, I began to think of the moft effectual means of rewarding their fidelity; and I requefted them to afk of me with freedom whatever they pleafed.

Klaas was at this moment fitting by my fide, fqueezing me by the hand, and teftifying in the moft affectionate manner the pleafure he felt at having once more contributed to my fafety. "I have a favour," faid he, " to afk " of you, not for myfelf, but for another. If "you think that my friend Jonker" (which was the name of my new Hottentot) " has " acted like a youth of courage, I could wih " you to beftow on him a fufee. It was I " who engaged him in your fervice; it is I " who am refponfible for his conduct; and be "affured he will never give you caufe to re"pent this indulgence."

To underftand this requeft the reader muft know, that I impofed on myfelf very fevere laws in the diftribution of my fire-arms. They were not given to all my people indifcriminately. On the contrary, I had granted this favour to thofe alone with whofe character I was thoroughly acquainted, and who had fignalized themfelves as much by their fidelity, as by their courage and addrefs; and thefe I farther diftinguifhed by the name of hunters. Every month I gave them alfo a ducatoon (a piece of coin of about nine livres) as pay; while the reft received only a rix-dollar, which is one third lefs: This pay, to men who had no need, during our journey, to be at any expence, added to other little profits which it was my intention one day to beftow upon them, could not but afford them the hopes of confiderable enjoyment when my excurfion fhould be completed, and they fhould return to the Cape.

I promifed to Jonker what Klaas had afked for him ; that is to fay, to give him, on my return to our camp at Krekenap, a fufee, with complete accourrements and ammunition. I even conferred on him another favour ; that of appointing him one of the conductors of m principal waggon, the benefits arifing from which, added to his pay as a hunter, increafed his income one half. Thus did I enjoy the pleafure of diftributing rewards and granting promotion to my companions, without the influence of any bafe intrigue, any infidious recommendation, that might induce me to be lavifh towards fome, and niggardly and unjuft towards others. In fhort, I happily governed my fmall caravan without the affiftance of thofe plodding intriguers, who vain of their knowledge, and intruding themfelves every where, arrogate to themfelves the right of meting out rewards, and pronouncing definitively refpecting the merits of others.

Thefe marks of diftinction, thefe various honours, conferred all at once upon my new Hottentor, fo elated him with joy, that he could not find words with which to exprefs to me his gratitude. Poffeffed of a fufee, and become the conductor of the carriage of his mafter, he was in his own eftimation equal in importance to a grandee of Spain. To liften to this Hottentot, he had all the difpofitions requifite in a fportfman. He felt, he faid, the greateft greateft defire imaginable to become a good markfman; and though he had few opportunities of improving himfelf, he found his ikill little inferior to his moft experienced neighbours. In fhort, he expatiated fo much, and with fuch fimplicity, upon the method he practifed for hitting the mark, as to afford extreme amufement to his countrymen who knew him. Seeing how much they enjoyed the joke, I propofed a trial of fkill, nothing doubting that our new knight-errant would prove an inexhauftible fource of entertainment. His three companions were all of them expert in what they undertook: as to himfelf, the poft of fafety, by way of eminence, would have been to have placed one's-felf precifely before the mark.

As I faw he looked fomewhat afhamed, and took the point to heart, and as he was even afraid that his mifcarriage would injure him with me, I was eager to revive his confidence: I told him that, when I firft attempted to handle a gun, I fhot farther from my mark than he did, and that I had no doubt, with his enthufiafm upon the fubject, he would foon prove a very excellent markfman. I fhould have
have been lefs forward in my compliments to a fpruce petit-maitre of my own country, moft efpecially if his foppery betrayed itfelf in the putting on a pair of fpectacles.

What I had predicted in pleafantry was afterwards confirmed: Jonker became in reality the moft intelligent, and the firf of my purveyors. A few obfervations will explain this fingularity. Hunting in Africa is a very different purfuit from what it is in Europe. There the talent of the hunter does not, as here, confift only in having a fteady hand, and a fure eye: with thefe qualities he muft poffefs others ftill more effential, and without which nothing is to be done againft the cunning of the antelopes of the defert. He mult have an acute fight, fo as to difcover the game at a confiderable diftance before they difcover him; he muft employ great art to lure and to deceive them; above all, he muft poffers an active body, capable of affuming every pofition, and of drawing itfelf patiently for a long time upon the ground, in order to get within reach without being perceived. Thefe are the qualifications of good African hunters; this it is which gives them that rare character, fo highly efteemed efteemed by the planters and the Hottentots, and on account of which they are diftinguifhed by the name of wild-bekruyper, an appellation equivalent to that of creeper-aftér-game. Such a fportfman, though he may not fhoot fo well as another deflitute of this African talent, will at the fame time kill more game ; becaufe, by his fupplenefs and addrefs, he will contrive to drag himfelfalong, till he approach fo near the animal that the moft unfkilful fhooter would find it impoffible to mifs. The Bofhmen are generally confidered as the beft bekruypers; meanwhile I have had frequent opportunities of admiring the fame agility in Jonker.

His fight was fo keen, that he could often diftinguifh an antelope as it lay upon the ground, at a diftance that I could not obferve it even with my glafs; and, excepting Kees, he had the moft penetrating eye of my whole caravan.

Wild animals poffefs the fenfe of feeing in the greateft perfection; becaufe, from the kind of life which they lead, having great diftances to traverfe, the faculty is in continual exercife, by the frequent need they have of meafuring thofe diftances. For the fame reafon, men alfo in a fate of nature enjoy this fenfe in a degree fcarcely lefs exquifite; and if thofe in civilifed fociety are deficient in this quality, it is becaufe their profpects being almoft always more confined, they have much lefs occafion to develop it; becaufe every thing that furrounds them, fuch as filks, gilding, reverberated and multiplied lights, objects of luxury, variegated and dazzling colours, fatigue, without improving their fight; and laftly, becaufe their profeffions, practices, and habits, their writing, reading, and the ftrange abufe of pleafures, muft tend early to impair a fenfe continually ftrained and perverted, while nothing is at the fame time prefented that can bring it to perfection. Why have hunters, who refide in the country, and above all mountaineers, better fight than the inhabitants of cities? The reafon is plain; and I may adduce myfelf as an example. Before my arrival in Africa, my fight was fo weak that, to read or write, I was obliged to hold the book or paper clofe to my eye. But having fpent feveral years in the open air, traverfing mountains and valleys, and croffing vaft deferts, it has been confiderably ftrengthened; and I can now fee as far as another.

When we had amufed ourfelves for fome time in firing at a mark, I thought it would be prudent to employ my powder in a more ufeful manner. As it was for the purpofe of hunting elephants that I had croffed the river, at the hazard of my own life, and the lives of my four companions, I refolved to go in purfuit of thefe animals. With this view, accompanied by my three hunters, I ranged about and fcoured the whole country ; but we faw neither dung nor traces, which made me fincerely regret that I had fubjected myfelf in vain to fo much fatigue, and expofed myfelf ufelefsly to fo many dangers. It is probable, as I have already faid, that the elephants frequented the right bank of the river; but when obliged by the drought to change their refidence, inftead of croffing to the left bank, where they would have found an equal fcarcity of food, they had retired farther into the interior part of the deferts towards the north.

The feverity of the cold had prevented us from fleeping the preceding night, and we were again equally unfortunate. A violent rain which came on continually extinguifhed our fires; nor was it poffible for us to re-kindle them. We were obliged, therefore, to fortify ourfelves with patience, and to wait till a new day fhould arrive to invigorate our ftrength.

It appeared, but without bringing more favourable weather ; and I refolved to return immediately to my camp by the fhorteft way I could find. As the rain had rendered my tent and other baggage exceedingly heavy, fo that my Hottentots were likely to be overloaded, I advifed them to abandon the two fkins of oil, that their burden might thereby be lightened. This was requefting, however, an impoffible facrifice; and rather than have made it they would have left behind them their clothes. Too mindful of the fervices they had rendered me, and unwilling to offend them, I contented myfelf with taking Klaas along with me; and I committed to his care my ibis, an object of which I was as tenacious as were my Hottentots of their oil. With regard to the other three, they were to take their own time, and return in whatever way they fhould find moft convenient.

Towards evening we arrived oppofite my camp, to reach which we had only to crofs the river; and we were at a place where, with a little precaution, it was tolerably practicable. The darknefs of the night prevented Swanepoel from feeing us; but our cries reached him, and he fent two horfes ufed to the water, and two fwimmers to guide us in our paffage, which we happily effected without danger.

Behold me then returned to my family, among my tents, my carriages, my companions, and my animals. How great was my joy when I compared my prefent tranquillity with my fituation at the mouth of the river! I found myfelf, however, fo exceffively fatigued, and fo oppreffed with drowfinefs, that, having taken off my wet clothes, and put on dry ones, I threw myfelf on my mattrefs, and flept without interruption till the next day at noon, that is to fay, nearly eighteen hours. I fhould even, I believe, have fallen into a lethargy but for the care of Swanepoel, who, alarmed at my fleeping fo long, and fearing that I was ill, came to waken me.

Jonker and the other two Hottentots, whom I left behind, had arrived in the morning, and they did not fail to relate to their companions all the circumftances of our curious adventure. Each made his remarks according to his chaS 2 racter;
racter ; but the hiftory of the whale diminifined my imprudence in their eyes, and rendered me much lefs culpable. They even confidered my journey to the coaft as the moft fortunate of our enterp:ifes; and they all regretted that they had not been chofen to accompany me: all, that is to fay, but Swanepoel, who alone feemed forry I had undertaken it, becaufe of the dangers to which it had expofed me. Sometimes he addreffed his reproaches to the whole company, and fometimes to the four fwimmers in particular, whom he confidered as criminal for having obeyed me. I myfelf even, as foon as I awoke, was not exempted from his cenfure. I refpected him on account of his age, and I liftened to his remonftrances; but I regretted at the fame time that I was not able to anfwer him, by difplaying before his eyes the fpoils of a conqueft more brilliant than that of an ibis, the only fruit of my perilous expedition.

At dinner, my foür companions had filled the heads of the other Hottentots with an idea of the great quantity of oil they might procure by going to the fea hore where we had left the whale. During the reft of the day, their converfation was engroffed by this unfortunate fubject; and fo heated were their imaginations, that, when I awoke the next morning, they came to me in a body to beg I would allow fix men with two oxen to make an excurfion to the fhore, for the purpofe of collecting a certain quantity of the melted blubber, which would afford them fo delicious a treat. This, however, was not precifely the motive they alleged, to induce me to load my waggons with this additional incumbrance. They pretended to have my intereft in view : the traces and axle-trees of my carriages, they faid, had almoft every moment need of being oiled; they wanted it even at prefent, as they had not for a long time been greafed; and I hould run, perhaps, the rifque of not finding again fo favourable an opportunity.

Thefe pretences, though apparently founded in truth, had with me very little weight. I had juft learned that, during my abfence, two of my beft oxen, while drinking at the river, had been carried away by the current and drowned; and there was reafon to apprehend that the fame accident might happen to others.

I had befides flattered myfelf, that, by remaining at Krekenap, I fhould find pafturage which would have reftored my fick cattle; and it was in reality to give them time to recover that I had indulged myfelf in an excurfion acrofs the river. This diftrict, however, had fupplied them with no better food than the preceding ones; their dyfentery fill increafed; and I found them on my return much worle than before. I had refolved, therefore, to decamp the fame day, and to proceed with all poffible expedition in fearch of a more fertile and happier fpot.

This plan was by no means favourable to that of a journey to the fea : but an ardent defire is not fo eafily extinguifhed; and I clearly faw that fooner or later I muft give way to it. My Hottentots perfifted in their requeft, reprefenting that it would in no manner retard my departure, if I would allow Jonker to be of the party, who being acquainted with the deferts which I was going to explore, would ferve as a guide, and enable them to join me by the fhorteft roads to the place where I might happen to encamp. Had I continued any longer obftinate, it might have excited too much much difcontent among my Hottentots. They received my confent with tranfports of joy that bordered upon delirium. For the moment, neither the evils we had fuffered nor the greater ones which awaited us had a fhare in their thoughts: every thing was forgotten: the hope alone of an abundant fupply of blubber was fufficient to conftitute the moft perfect happinefs.

So great was their eagernefs, that I was obliged to allow Jonker to fet off immediately with the two oxen and his detachment. I gave him a fufee and ammunition; and he was faluted by the acclamations of my whole company. Enviable mortals, who could be contented at fo finall an expence, and whom a little oil was about to render fo wealthy and felicitous!

My own departure was lefs joyful; though I had ftrong reafons for quitting without regret the banks of a river which had been fo highly extoiled to me, and which had proved by my refiding there fo difaftrous to my cattle. But I was terrified at the profpee before me, and I anticipated the misfortunes with which I was threatened. The fky was beauS 4 tifu!

TRAVELS IN

tiful and ferene, and we directed our courfe towards the north: notwithftanding, however, the mildnefs of the weather, my cattle were fo, weak that, after a march of three hours, they refufed to draw, and obliged me to halt. In the afternoon they were able to proceed only two leagues farther. I was then under the neceffity of unharnefling, and of abandoning three of my oxen, which funk through fatigue, and probably died on the fpot, as we never faw them afterwards, In the night I loft five more, which I faw miferably perifh in the place where they had lain down, without my being able to afford them relief; and fo weak and exhaufted were the remainder, that, another league, and they would all perhaps be reduced to the fame melancholy fituation. We had found, indeed, during the whole day, neither water nor pafturage : yet I refumed my journey, but with the precaution of fending out, in all directions, fuch of my people as I could fpare, in order to difcover, if poffible, a fpring and a little herbage, near which we might encamp.

But vain and fruitlefs was the precaution: the foil, in this frightful defert, prefented every-
where to their view the fame fcorched and unproductive furface. I now reproached myfelf for the valuable time I had wafted on the banks of the Elephants-River, by which my cattle had been deprived of the little frength that remained to them, and were rendered incapable of gaining a lefs fatal diftrict. We, however, purfued our way through the naked fands, exhaufted, melancholy and hopelefs. At length I perceived at a diftance the KrakkeelKlip (rock of difcord), where, I had been told, was a deep and fpacious hollow; and the late rains it was poffible might have filled it with water. As we drew nearer, we imagined that upon the borders of this hollow we faw fome waggons : an idea that filled us with joy and revived our hopes. We inferred from this appearance, that the cavities of the rock muft infallibly abound with water; and as to the carriages, whether they were the property of a Hottentot or belonged to fome traveller, we might promife ourfelves certain information of the route we had to purfue. Alas! it was all a delufion. Upon our approach the waggons difappeared, and in their ftead two enormous elephants prefented themfelves to our view, who had come to this refervoir ta quench their thirf, and who betook themfelves to flight the moment they perceived us.

The cavity indeed contained fome water, and a fufficient abundance to ferve even my whole caravan. But how deteftable was its nature! Frequented by all the wild animals of the diftrict, who repaired thither to drink, the borders of the pond were covered with excrement and filth, which the rain continually diluted and carried along with it to the bottom of the refervoir. By the fermentation of thefe putrid and infectious fubftances, it had acquired a greenifh colour, a naufeous fmell, and the moft abominable tafte. So great, however, was our diftrefs, that the difcovery of this difgufting pond was confidered by us as a fortunate event. Before I fuffered my cattle to tafte it, I ordered the jars we had emptied the preceding evening to be filled; and to render it as drinkable as I could, I filtered it carefully through feveral linen cloths; it was then put on the fire; and afterwards I threw into it a few ounces of coffee that had been ground. By thefe operations it was clarified a little, and the tafte it had contracted by the faline and fulphurous particles of the excrements diffolved in it was fomewhat diminifhed; but the noxious quality, communicated by thefe folutions, remained in all its force. All who drank of it were feized with a loofenefs; and to fome it occafioned vomiting, hiccups, and violent pains in the bowels, which made us apprehend that the water might have been poifoned. I was the only perfon it fpared; or rather, my fufferings were lefs becaufe, having mixed it with goat's milk, I had drunk but a very fmall quantity,

From Krekenap to Krakkeel-klip, the diftance was only eight leagues; and thefe eight leagues had been the bufinefs of two complete days: during the fecond, indeed, I was able to accomplifh only three, which coft me no lefs than eight hours march. For, exclufive of the general weaknefs of my oxen, which could with difficulty drag themfelves along at the rate of half a mile an hour, we had continually to unyoke, in order to leave behind us thofe in particular, which, fainting through inanition, were incapable of uifing again upon their legs. In a word, to form a juft eftimate of the deplorable fituation to which thefe animals mals were reduced, the reader muft be informed that, fince my laft departure, that is to fay, during the two calamitous days I have been fpeaking of, I had left feventeen of them extended here and there on the road.

Towards evening, I faw arrive fucceffively at the rock different herds of antelopes (fpringbocks) which were accuftomed no doubt to quench their thirf at the pond. In vain did I attempt to get near enough to kill fome of them, thereby to obtain a fupply of provifion for a day or two, and fave the few fheep I had left. They eluded my vigilance; and my horfes, being equally exhaufted with my oxen, could not be employed in purfuing them. No fituation could be more defperate. I imagined myfelf to have arrived at the boundary of my travels, and I retired to reft overwhelmed with the moft painful and melancholy ideas.

Next morning we found our poor animals in fuch a ftate of laffitude, that we unanimoufly agreed to fpend the day at Krakeelklip, to afford them an opportunity of refting themfelves; and I employed the early part of the interval in once more giving chace to the antelopes with a few of my beft markfimen :

A F R I C A,

but the plain was too open and uncovered for us to come within fhot of them.

The pond was the only refervoir of water within a great diftance round, and fortunately fome coveys of moor-fowl repaired thither to drink. My people, more fuccefsful than myfelf, killed about thirty brace of thefe birds, which afforded us a moft excellent repaft. One of my oxen was in a ftate of agony, which feemed to indicate that before night I fhould lofe him. I therefore refigned him to my Hottentots; and the flefh, when falted and prepared after their manner, fupplied them with a ftock of provifions which lafted fome time.

I had retired to my tent, a prey to the bittereft reflections, when, in the middle of the night, Kees all at once fent forth a cry which was inftantly anfwered by the barking of my whole pack of dogs. By the acutenefs of his fmell, his hearing, and his fight, this animal was always the firft to put us on our guard againft danger; and, of all the fervices which he rendered to me, this was the one which principally induced me to be fond of him. The alarm he had given fet every body on foot; for we had equally to dread the attack of the Bofhmen and that of ravenous beafts. of prey. The vicinity of the ciffern might expofe us to either, and perhaps even to both at the fame time. Uncertain what enemy I had to combat, I caufed a few fhots to be difcharged towards the quarter which my ape pointed out, and from time to time I took care they fhould be repeated.

Thefe fuppofed enemies were my people, who had gone in fearch of the whale. They were now on their return; and, having difcovered our camp by means of the fires we had kindled, were haftening to join us. The noife of our fufees had frightened them; they kept therefore at a diftance ; and previoully to their advancing they difcharged a fhot in their turn to inform me who they were.

At that moment, however, prepoffeffed with the idea of being attacked, and having no expectation of their arrival at fo unfeafonable an hour, their fignal only increafed our alarm. We imagined them to be maroon Hottentots, who, provided with fire-arms, had come to affaffinate us and plunder my camp. The difcharging of the fufee frengthened this idea, and was confidered by us in no other light
than as the commencement of a battle. Prefuming that the enemy was firing from fome ambufh, and was endeavouring to dillodge us, I encouraged my people, and we refted under arms the whole night, refolved, in cafe of extremity, to fell our lives as dearly as poffible.

When day appeared, I obferved indeed, at a certain diftance, a group of Hottentots; but though they were in reality my own, not feeing the two oxen which ought to have accompanied them, my mind became more and more confirmed in the idea that pre-occupied it, and I did not know them. Obferving them, however, approach towards me, I went to meet them, and the illufion was prefently at an end. The air of dejection with which they accofted me fufficiently announced how well founded had been my forefight, when I oppofed their departure. They told me that they had gone in queft of me too far to the north, fuppofing me to be more advanced in my journey; but perceiving no traces either of my waggons or animals, and apprehenfive that fome accident had retarded me, they had thought proper to return, and had proceeded towards Krekenap.

With regard to the two oxen, they had pea rifhed by the way for want of pafturage. Perhaps my Hottentots themfelves had occafioned their death by fatiguing them too much, and obliging them to carry a burthen of oil greater than their ftrength would admit. I was in a manner convinced of the truth of this fufpicion: but, fituated as I was, I did not think it right to difhearten them by reproaches. Wha could have believed it? From the moment the party had quitted the whale, they had neither eaten nor drunk; but the paffion for the oil, of which they had gone in purfuit, had rendered both hunger and fatigue fupportable. They brought back about a hundred pounds weight; and there was nothing, as I conceive, that they regretted in this cruel difafter but the not having been able to bring the whale itfelf.

I was afraid fo much as to examine the fate of my caravan. From day to day it had become more deplorable, and my foul was filled with anguifh and apprehenfion. It was not without effort that I could fpur myfelf on to the review. I could, however, no longer difpenfe myfelf from afcertaining the number of oxen that were capable of being again put in harnefs.
harnefs. Alas! it was dreadfully diminifhed, and I was obliged to leave one of my vehicles behind me in the defert. It was the firft time fuch a misfortune had overtaken me; but there was no remedy, and my Africans advifed me to fubmit. But this was not all: I knew not what was to become of us, whither we were to go, or to what point we were to direct our courfe. This was a new and more horrible fource of difquietude. I cannot defcribe it in a more ftriking manner than by adding, that I defpaired of being able to conceal thefe alarming circumftances from my companions, and therefore called them together and laid the whole of the cafe before them.' By one, I was advifed to return the way I had come, and to regain the ElephantsRiver: by another, to pufh on to that of Swarte Dooren, which was in reality not a river, but a canal made by fome torrent; but which, from the late rains that had fallen, might perhaps fupply us both with water and pafturage. The firt of thefe projects was impracticable, and, fo far from offering a refotirce, threatened deftruction as well to ourtelves as to our cattle, if we were rafh enough to undertake it. We

fhould have, indeed, at the Elephants-River, though no pafturage, the confolation of water in abundance; but to return through the fcorched plains we had left behind us, and to travel three days more, with fuch lean and exhaufted animals, and in want too of every neceffary, was more than could be effected though fome god had been the charioteer. On the contrary, the other plan might plunge us fill deeper perhaps in the abyfs; but, concealed behind the veil of futurity, it was a refource that afforded us at leaft fome food for our hopes.

Obliged to make a choice, I therefore gave the fignal for advancing; and every thing was in motion for our departure. We abandoned the carriage, after taking fuch things from it as I conceived would be neceffary for our ufe, and fubftituting in their ftead fome heavy boxes from the other two vehicles, in order to render them lighter. Thefe articles I intended one day to recover, if circumftances proved favourable; and in the mean time I entrufted them to the care of heaven and the elephants. However, that no Hottentot hordes or planters from the frontiers, paffing that way, might fave me this trouble, I ordered the carriage to be furrounded and even covered all over with the branches of trees, which gave it at a diftance the appearance of a bufh ; and, as a farther precaution, my Hottentots took off one of the wheels and buried it at a diftance in the earth.

We refumed our journey, and by patience, courage, and perfeverance, arrived at laft at Scbuit-Klip (boat rock), but not without lofing more of our oxen, though the diftance we travelled was only two leagues and a half. Schuit-Klip is a fmall rock of an oval form, and, as its name implies, hollowed out like a boat. It contained a fmall quantity of water, and, to add to our felicity, of a moft excellent kind. From the fteepnefs of its borders, the quadrupeds in the neighbourhood were unable to trouble it, and it was not therefore fpoiled like that of Krakkeel-Klip. For the fame reafon, my horfes could not drink at this refervoir ; but we drew from it a fufficiency to afford a little refrefhment both to them and my oxen; and, always fanguine as to the future, I deferred till the next day the continuance of our journey. So many obftacles, however, that feemed incapable of being furmounted, did not fail to damp my courage; and though I affumed externally an air of tranquillity, and talked to my companions in a tone of cheerfulnefs, I was inwardly a prey to the mof tormenting reflections. Swanepoel, better acquainted with my character and difpofition, and poffeffing alfo more penetration than my dear Klaas, came to me to make a very fatal propofition, which was that of leaving behind me another of my vehicles. "Your teams;" faid he, " are reduced to a flate of debility, " which requires that you fhould be as fparing " 6 of them as poffible. Notwithftanding our "cares to diminifh the luggage, fill, if they " have two waggons to draw, 1 fear that before " to-morrow night not a fingle ox will re" main alive. In that cafe what will become " of us? We are not far from the diftrict of "Klaas Bafter, the man pointed out by Colo" nel Gordon as likely to be of ufe to $u$ s. Go " in purfuit of him, continuing your journey " with one waggon only. As you proceed, " difpatch your people different ways through " the country; and if you are fo happy as to "f find him, fend us affiftance. Give me only ${ }^{\text {ef }}$ four men, and I will be anfwerable not only

8s for the carriage you thall leave here, but alfo "for that which we abandoned at Krakkeel. "Klip."

This advice was certainly, under fuch circumftances, the moft reafonable that could be given. By hufbanding the water of the rock, Swanepoel would have wherewith to fupply the wants of his fmall detachment ; and fome thowers of rain might happen to fill and augment the ciftern. I left with him, therefore; a fupply of provifions; removed into his waggon fuch heavy articles as were likely to embarrafs me on my way, and addreffed to him at my departure a word of admonition: " My " dear Swanepoel," faid I, "if my unlucky " ftars, if the bad fortune which perfecutes me " fhould bring hither a band of maroon Hot"tentots, or plundering Bofhmen, I exprefsly "forbid you to expofe either your own life or " the lives of your companions; let my car"riage be robbed; haften immediately to " join me, and let me fee you again as fafe and " found as I leave you."

Of the fifty-four oxen with which I began my journey, thirty-one had died. The twentythree that remained I divided into three teams, [^3]convinced that eight would be fufficient for my waggon after it had been fo much lightened. At the fame time $l$ took care to fhorten the ftages, and to proceed only a league without changing the team; and in this manner I arrived at Oliphants-Kop (Elephants-head).

This likewife is a rock that has acquired its name from its figure. I flattered myfelf that I fhould find water here as at Schuit-Klip, and there had actually been fome in its different cavities; but, except a little moifture, it had all evaporated. My oxen, which had not drank during the whole day, and which, the evening before indeed, had only been fupplied with a few drops, vifited in vain all the clefts of the rock. So great was the diftrefs of thefe poor animals, that, wherever they found moifture, they held their noftrils over it, as if refrefhed by its exhalation, and endeavoured to lap up with their tongues the aqueous particles it might contain; while at the fame time they preffed their fides and beat their tails againft the cavity, feeking to imbibe relief at every pore. As for me, I had fill a little water remaining in a jar, which I fhared with the twelve Hottentots who accompanied me; and we found another refource in my goats, as their milk was not yet dried up.

The heavy and continued rains we experienced, when proceeding along the banks of the Elephants-River, had not extended to the diftrict of Oliphants-Kop; or, at leaft, if any had fallen here, as the cavities of the rock feemed to indicate, the quantity had been too fimall to produce any vifible effect on vegetation.

The country every where around exhibited the moit frightful fterility, nor did any thing feem to indicate a change. To the weft was an immenfe plain, which, extending perhaps to the fea, prefented, as far as the eye could reach, an uniform fheet of dry earth, interfperfed here and there with a few oily plants only, and fome withered and ftunted bufhes. At the, eaft a long ridge of naked mountains gloomily bounded the horizon; and, in fhort, filence, drearinefs, and defolation, prevailed on all fides.
In a fituation lefs deplorable I had formerly been indebted for my fafety to a bird, which, alighting upon a rock, had given me reafon to conclude that it might contain water; and I $\mathrm{T}_{4}$ expected expected the fame benefit here from flocks of moor-game, which I faw pafs me in the air. With this hope I followed their flight with eager eyes; for I knew that thefe birds repair regularly twice a day to the water to drink and wafh themfelves: but conceive the defpair in which I was plunged, when, flying at firft from north to fouth, I faw them return in a contrary direction without ftopping; which feemed to be an infallible fign that there was no fpring, nor the fmalleft refervoir of water, any where in the neighbourhood. Thefe birds, however, flew at fuch a prodigious height, that my fight could not long follow them ; and all I could conclude from their paffage was, that they were perhaps haftening to quench their thirft at the Elephants-River. No rock bird whatever alighted near us; which doubtlefs indicated that nature here was in a mof forlorn ftate. Moor-fowl, in general, are inaufpicious birds, becaufe, living on feeds and infects, they are to be met with only in dry and fcorched diftricts. I recollected that I had been under great alarm, during my firft journey, by the circumftance of the numerous coveys of them I had feen in croffing the barren country of Karaw, Karaw, after leaving Snewberg, and that it had proved a fign equally certain of the fterility of the diftrict: whereas neither in the fertile country of the Caffres, nor in the delightful groves of Auteniqua, had I ever obferved a bird of this kind : a contraft that excited in my mind the moft melancholy fenfations.

We had arrived at Oliphants-Kop at fo early an hour, that I hoped we fhould be able to proceed a few leagues farther before the clofe of the day; and I was the more refolved to do fo, as, feeing neither pafturage nor water, it was neceffary for me to truft to the chance of finding, at a greater diftance, a more commodious foot for encamping. I gave orders therefore for our departure ; but when my people began to harnefs my oxen, not one of them was found fit for fervice: they all lay down around the waggon fo apparently exhaufted, that there was reafon to apprehend they would never rife again upon their legs.

What fituation could be more dreadful? I faw myfelf obliged to pafs the night in this parched and barren fpot, where my cattle were about to perifh for want of water and food, and we ourfelves, in like manner, were tormented with the mof devouring thirf; and to add to this diftrefs, not even the fmalleft hope prefented itfelf of being able to extricate myfelf from my difficulties. Meanwhile, to leave no refource untried, I employed all my people, during the remaining part of the day, in fearching every where in the neigh bourhood, each in a different quarter, for holes and cavities which might have been filled with rain ; and I went myfelf upon the fame purfuit with my ape and my dogs: but we all returned, Hottentots and their mafter, one after another, dejected to the camp, with the fame tidings upon our lips, "I have found no-thing:"-dreadful tidings, that configned us over to fill farther fufferings and mifery !

What a crowd of black and ill-omened ideas now rufhed upon my mind! At fight of the deplorable fituation of my unfortunate cattle, a deadly terror crept through my veins. The ftate of my Hottentots, from whom I had endeavoured to conceal a part of our evils, did not fail allo to add to my torments; and I curfed a thoufand times the blind confidence which had induced me to advance.

A defperate fituation leads to the adoption of defperate meafures I I refolved therefore inftantly to embrace the only expedient I had to purfue; which was, to abandon my third and laft vehicle, together with the animals that remained, to diftribute arms and ammunition among my people, and to proceed on foot to the Elephants-River with fuch of them as would agree to follow me.

This plan, with whatever difficulties it might be attended, was apparently the only rational one that remained: yet, when I propofed it to my Hottentots, not an individual approved of it. Convinced that the interruption of a journey, which they had feen me fo anxious to accomplifh, muft occafion me the greateft mortification, they unanimoufly protefted that they would never abandon me, and that they would cheerfully go on with me wherever I fhould think proper to lead them. At the fame time each exhorted me to take courage, and to try my fortune once more, by proceeding a few leagues farther. Thofe who had gone in fearch of water towards the eaft affured me, by way of confolation, that there wàs a range of hills at the bottom of the mountains before us, and that the valleys between would perhaps afford us excellent paiturage and abundance of water while thofe who had gone out in the oppofite direction had obferved a cloud or two peep ${ }^{2}$ ing above the horizon, from which they augured in their turn that a florm was not fat diftant, and that it would certainly make its appearance either during the night or to morrow.

Under the immediate preffure of difficulties and danger, fuch vague conjectures infpired me with little confidence: but the affecting teftimonies of attachment I had received, rendered lefs painful to me the thoughts of a diffolution, which I confideted as rapidly approaching. I exhorted all my people to betake themfelves to reft ; and I retired myfelf to my waggon, where I fpent the whole night in the moft gloomy reflections. At break of day I was fuddenly roufed from my reverie by a clap of thunder, which confirmed, to demons ftration, what had been announced by one of my Hottentots. I jumped with alertnefs from the carriage, and, by a natural movement, raifed my hands in adoration towards the clouds, which the thunder feemed to be driving before it. My friends, tranfported like myfelf, ranged themfelves eagerly around me. In a moment the whole heavens were overcaft, and the clouds blackened delightfully over our heads. My heart palpitated with joy and apprehenfion. I waited with the moft eager impatience for the happy effects of the ftorm ; every inftant expecting it to defcend upon us in a torrent of rain. Tranfient hopes! horrible, horrible joy ! Scattered by the wind, the clouds difappeared from over our heads, and funk below the horizon. This fpectacle ftruck every one of us with fo great a confternation, as to deprive us of all power of fpeech or motion. Defpair became impreffed upon the moft refolute of my people; and the dead filence that followed, thewed how vain it was to call upon them for confolation or affiftance.

Daring the night two of my ozen had died, and three of my dogs had deferted me. I loft alfo one of my hoifes, which I faw expire before my eyes. Thus was I lofing one by one my whole flock of cattle; and I beheld them perifh with the more regret, becaufe, having fhared in my fatigues, I had become attached to them as fo many fervants of my houfehold. They approached flowly indeed to their laft moments, moments, but thefe moments were fingulatly painful. They were firft feized with convulfions, which ended in a long and dreadful agony. Scarcely was one deprived of life than another became a facrifice. Next after my horfe, this unhappy lot fell upon the very beft of my oxen; and of all my loffes, this in particular occafioned me the greateft affliction. The reader will pardon me if I digrefs for a moment to tell him the reafon.

I had given to this faithful fervant the name of Ingland. He was the oldeft and ftrongeft beaft I poffeffed: accordingly ne had fuccefsfully encountered the fatigue of my firf journey, though, during the whole route, he had conftantly occupied the thill to my heavieft and principal waggon. Diftinguifhed by an inftinct fuperior to the other animals of his fpecies, my people, when they unharneffed him, gave themfelves no concern to prevent him from efcaping; he wandered at will in the pafture, and was committed, if I may fo exprefs myfelf, to the guidance of his own underftanding; there was no fear that he would warder from the place. When it was time to travel another flage, it was unneceffary to fetch him from the pafture, and bring him to the waggon, as was requifite for the reft: three fmacks of the whip was our fignal for march, and as foon as he heard them he came to his poit. He was always the firft to prefent himfelf to the traces, as if he had been afraid to lofe his priority in a place which he had conftantly been employed to occupy.

If I went out for exercife, or to hunt, at my return Ingland, as far as he could fee me, quitted his pafture, and ran towards me with a particular fort of bellowing, expreffive of his joy. He rubbed his head againft my body in different directions, and careffed me after his manner. Frequently he licked my hands; and I was conftrained to ftop long enough to receive his civilities, which fometimes lafted for a quarter of an hour. At length, when I had replied by my endearments and by a kifs, he led the way to my tent, and walked quietly before me.

The evening before he died, Ingland laid down near the fhaft of his waggon; and it was in this place he expired. I faw his laft agonies, but was unable to render him the flighteft affiftance. Ah! how frequently, when friend-friendfhip has mifled me, when feducing appearances have allured my confidence, have I thought of poor Ingland, and involuntarily caft my eye upon the hand he had fo often licked!

The rain which we had defired with fo much earneftnefs having failed us, we were determined to quit our northern direction, and to return to the north-eaft, towards thofe paffes in the mountains from which we expected our fafety,

For twenty-four hours not one of us had tafted food. Not that we had been in any want, of provifions ; but we were apprehenfive that eating would enhance our defire to drink. Thus exhaufted with fatigue, worn out with watchfulnefs, and tormented with thirf, we refumed our journey and proceeded to the mountains.
